He does not trust easily and always looks beyond what people say to determine their meaning. Consequently he is very hard to manipulate and very hard to influence and as such he is very hard to lead; he prefers to be in charge. Therefore he is skilled in convincing people. He knows how to influence others and lead people because as Northouse (2019) asserts leadership is an influence process.\nUnlike the author\u2019s fianc\u00e9 a significant portion of the population does not delve deeply into the authenticity of the information they receive; 18% of Americans report that social media has a significant impact on their voting decisions and 55% consider it their primary news source according to a 2019 Pew Research study. This widespread influence of social media raises a compelling question about the nature of leadership in the digital era. Building on Northouse's definition I intend to argue that the influence exerted by social media can be seen as a form of authentic leadership. This form of leadership practiced by social media influencers aligns closely with authentic leadership theory emphasizing transparency ethics and a focus on the communal good. Through their pervasive reach and often personal engagement with followers these influencers craft a modern leadership narrative that significantly shapes public opinions and societal values.\nSocial Significance\nThe influence of social media is profound and ubiquitous reaching across all sectors of society. According to the Pew Research Center approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some type of social media with varying impacts on social political and community engagement (Pew Research Center 2021). The breadth of this influence spans across diverse demographic groups making nearly everyone a potential recipient of communicated messages whether accurate or misleading.\nThe potential benefits of this influence include increased awareness and mobilization for social causes as seen with movements like #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter which have propelled significant societal shifts and brought critical issues to the forefront of global awareness. Social media influencers have played crucial roles in these movements utilizing their platforms to amplify voices and call for action. For instance prominent figures like Alyssa Milano and Tarana Burke have used their influence to promote the #MeToo movement leading to widespread discussions about sexual harassment and assault (Mendes et al. 2018).\nHowever the risks involve the spread of misinformation and manipulating public opinion which can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The cost of such influence can be seen in the widespread controversies surrounding elections and public policy debates where influencers have swayed public sentiment through both genuine and questionable means. For example during the 2016 U.S. presidential election false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots was found to have significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors (Allcott & Gentzkow 2017).\nThe individuals most impacted by this phenomenon include young adults who are the most active on platforms like Instagram and TikTok and are particularly susceptible to influencer marketing and political campaigns (Auxier & Anderson 2021). This demographic's high engagement levels highlight the critical need to understand the mechanisms of influence and leadership within these digital platforms. Research indicates that young people trust influencers more than traditional celebrities or politicians making them a key target for marketing and political messaging (Djafarova & Rushworth 2017).\nIn addition to social movements and political implications the economic impact of social media influence is significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry with brands leveraging the reach and authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence the influencer marketing industry is set to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence 2021). This economic dimension underscores the dual nature of influencer power: while it offers opportunities for authentic brand engagement it also raises questions about ethics and transparency in advertising.\nThe social significance of social media influence is further highlighted by its role in mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image particularly among young women. For example Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies. These findings suggest that while influencers can promote positive messages they also have the potential to contribute to harmful social norms.\nConclusion\nThis research project is situated at the intersection of leadership theory and digital media studies. It aims to critically analyze the role of social media influencers as contemporary leaders who not only entertain but also significantly influence societal values and norms. By aligning the characteristics of social media leadership with authentic leadership theories this study will evaluate the authenticity and ethical considerations of influencers' practices. The findings are expected to provide insights into how digital platforms can be harnessed for responsible and effective leadership promoting positive change while mitigating risks associated with digital influence. This foundational exploration sets the stage for a detailed literature review in Chapter 2 where theories of leadership and empirical studies on digital influence will be synthesized to build a comprehensive framework for understanding leadership in the digital age.\n\n\nCHAPTER 2: Identification of Phenomenon\n\nThe author's fianc\u00e9 does not consider social media such as TikTok and Twitter as reliable sources of information. He feels that government leaders and politicians undermine the seriousness and importance of their positions when they use lighthearted TikTok videos to promote their message or agenda. Additionally he believes that such displays reflect the sensationalism and showmanship of American politics. In contrast to the author's fiance's opinion a Pew Research study in 2023 found that over 50% of adults surveyed reported getting their news from social media at least sometimes (Social Media and News Fact Sheet 2023).\nOn July 21st 2024 President Joe Biden announced his decision not to seek re-election in the fall. This historic announcement marking the first time in over fifty years that a sitting president refused their party's nomination was made using the platform now known as X (Mason et al. 2024). The use of social media highlights its efficiency in disseminating information and providing individuals with the opportunity to engage in the public sphere gain followers and exert influence on an unprecedented scale.\nSocial media has emerged as a formidable force influencing public opinions and attitudes in the contemporary digital era. This phenomenon where social media shapes and reflects public opinions is particularly significant when examined through authentic leadership theory. Authentic leadership which emphasizes transparency ethics and a communal focus aligns closely with the activities of social media influencers who wield substantial sway over their followers.\nThe role of social media in influencing public opinion is both profound and pervasive. Approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses social media with platforms such as Facebook and YouTube leading the way (Auxier & Anderson 2021). This extensive reach ensures that nearly everyone is exposed to the opinions and ideas circulated on these platforms whether accurate or misleading. The impact of social media is evident in various sectors from political engagement to social movements economic trends and mental health.\nIn order to investigate this phenomenon data was collected through a comprehensive literature review and qualitative analysis of social media interactions. The sources encompassed peer-reviewed articles books on leadership theories and empirical studies on social media's influence. Statistical data on social media usage and its societal impacts was provided by reputable institutions such as the Pew Research Center.\nThe influence of social media on public opinion became noticeable in the early 21st century with the advent of platforms like Facebook Twitter and YouTube. Events such as the Arab Spring (2011) and Occupy Wall Street (2011) highlighted the power of social media to mobilize people and spread ideas rapidly. The #MeToo movement which gained momentum through a tweet by Alyssa Milano in 2017 exemplified how social media could catalyze significant social change by encouraging victims of sexual harassment to speak out (Thomson 2018).\nIn addition to social movements social media's influence extends deeply into the political sphere. Modern political candidates in America have recognized the necessity of maintaining a robust online presence. Platforms like Twitter and Facebook are not only used for engagement but also for major announcements policy declarations and real-time interaction with constituents. For instance former President Donald Trump famously used Twitter to communicate directly with the public and announce significant policy decisions bypassing traditional media channels (Heilweil & Ghaffary 2021). This direct communication method aligns with the principles of authentic leadership where transparency and direct engagement are paramount.\nAuthentic leadership as defined by Northouse (2019) is a process where an individual influences others to achieve a common goal through genuine and ethical behavior. This concept is mirrored in the actions of social media influencers who build trust and engagement with their followers through transparency and authenticity. Influencers and public figures like Tarana Burke and Alyssa Milano have utilized their platforms to lead movements such as #MeToo advocating for societal values of justice and accountability (Mendes et al. 2018). These influencers often exemplify the core components of authentic leadership by maintaining a transparent and genuine presence online fostering trust and loyalty among their followers. This trust is critical enabling influencers to mobilize their audience for various causes from social justice movements to political campaigns.\nSocial media acts as both a mirror and a mold for public opinion reflecting current sentiments and attitudes while simultaneously shaping those sentiments through disseminating information and mobilizing collective action. For instance during the 2016 U.S. presidential election social media significantly influenced voter perceptions through both authentic content and misinformation (Allcott & Gentzkow 2017). The economic implications of social media influence are also significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry with brands leveraging influencers' reach and perceived authenticity to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence the influencer marketing industry is projected to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence 2021).\nWhile social media holds the potential for positive influence it also poses risks. The spread of misinformation can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The controversies surrounding the 2016 U.S. presidential election exemplify this risk where false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors (Allcott & Gentzkow 2017). Moreover the influence of social media extends to mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image particularly among young women. For instance Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies.\nThe role of social media in shaping and reflecting public opinions and attitudes is intricately linked with the principles of authentic leadership. Influencers who engage authentically with their followers can drive significant social change by promoting ethical behavior and communal values. As digital platforms continue to evolve understanding the mechanisms of this influence becomes crucial for harnessing social media's power for positive societal impact.\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\nCHAPTER 3: Literature Review\n\n[Literature Review Instructions: From the topic chosen for the Capstone project review and examine a minimum of ten to fifteen sources related to surveying both theory and practice on the Capstone topic. Both theory and practice were explored through the research in the literature review. With these chapters and any conversations with mentors in mind carefully craft a narrative that addresses the change (campaign initiative resource) being proposed.\nExplain briefly what this change is and why this change should take place. If a research question(s) is appropriate for the project please provide it/them. This section will include 3-5 pages that provide the process of the solution being proposed to implement.\nThis section must include research explaining why this solution is the best course of action. Examples might include training website blog Wiki page social media campaign evaluation process and rubric organizational philosophy mission/vision/values statement course syllabus webinar etc.] \n[Implementation]\n[Drawing from the goals narrated upload fully developed materials that would be used in implementation of the proposed solution. This might include video PowerPoint training manual quizzes handouts links etc. This is a substantial portion of the project and these materials should address how the proposed solution will be implemented from start to finish.\n[Project Measurements]\n\t[In this section describe what is being measured and what methods will be used to measure the success of the proposed project. In the design of the project plan think about how to measure successes/failures of the proposed solution. Once it\u2019s determined what to measure explain how to measure them. Like the section above this project proposal illustrates the researcher\u2019s expertise and informed process: explain what elements are being measured and why they are being chosen to measure; what is being measured and the methods being used to measure the project\u2019s outcome. Share the logic and thought process behind the measurements of the project.]\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\nCHAPTER 5: Reflections and Recommendations\nProject Summary\n\t[Briefly summarize the goal for the project the actions that were taken and the results realized.]\nReflections\n[Reflect on the project in its entirety. What was learned? What were the highest moments of the research process? What were the lowest moments? If the project moves forward provide recommendations for change. Discuss the strengths and weaknesses of the project.]\nRecommendations/Conclusions \n[What would be the next steps from this project? What are some recommendations for future researchers? (2014). Between Person and Person: Dialogical Pedagogy in Authentic Leadership \tDevelopment. Academy of Management Learning & Education 13(2) 245\u2013264. Business \tSource Elite. <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?\tdirect=true&db=bsh&AN=96695857&site=ehost-live\nBerkovich (2010) suggests that dialogical pedagogy can be used to develop authentic leadership. He examines and critiques common approaches and ideas held in the academic community regarding authentic leadership theory. The author goes on to summarize and discuss current approaches to authentic leadership development. Berkovich (2010) identifies and discusses the central focus \u2018narrative identity processing\u2019 and \u2018dramaturgical enactment\u2019 of two of the foremost didactic methods for authentic leadership development. He then suggests a new perspective based in

dialogical philosophy and sets about describing a proposed framework for dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership. Berkovich (2010) identifies eight areas of dialogical pedagogy which are useful in authentic leadership development: care contact critical thinking empathy mutuality open-mindedness respect and self-exposure. Finally the article evaluates and critiques the use and outcomes of using dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership development initiatives.\n\tThe source was useful in that the author first defined his view of the current perspectives in authentic leadership before exploring a new perspective. The author discusses the foundations and mechanics of dialogical pedagogy in an in-depth manner which is helpful in understanding the overall purpose and ideas set forth in the article. The article is from a peer reviewed scholarly journal and is found easily through a simple search in EbscoHost through the university\u2019s library.\nBlekkingh B. W. (2015). Infinite \tIdeas; eBook Collection (EBSCOhost). \t <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspxdirect=true&db=nlebk&AN=987184&site=ehost-live\nThis e-book explores the ideas present in authentic leadership theory with the intent to use them as a tool for discovering ones purpose. Blekkingh (2015) approaches his topic through a seven layer model which he postulates is the framework of all human beings. These seven layers in chapter discussion order are: environment behavior skills norms ego values and authenticity. The initial seven chapters are each focused on one of these layers and the problems associated with each layer. Blekkingh (2015) suggests that through this layered self reflection one is enabled to find their authentic self and their purpose. He presents the idea that this once an individual is aware of their authentic self and purpose they will be able to \u201cput Authentic Leadership into effect\u201d (Blekkingh 2015 p. x). Finally he concludes the book with resources for further exploration and includes a lengthy appendix that functions as kind of encyclopedia with supplemental materials.\n\tThe author is a credible source in the field of authentic leadership theory due to his work as both an authentic leadership lecturer at a Dutch university and as one of the founders of a consultancy firm centered around the tenets of authentic leadership. One failing of the book as Authentic Leadership resource is that many of the examples in the book are mainly anecdotal and lack an academic or scientific robustness. In contrast the authors simple language and engaging exercises make his ideas and pedagogy easily understood and applicable to anyone.\nGardner W. L. Avolio B. J. Luthans F. May D. R. & Walumbwa F. The authors begin by defining their interpretation of the constructs of authenticity authentic leadership and authentic followership. Gardner et al (2005) then discuss a conceptual authentic leadership framework for leader and follower development. Gardner et al (2005) propose what they describe as a \u201cself-based model of the developmental processes for authentic leadership and followership\u201d (p. 348). This model sets forth the idea that a leader\u2019s personal history is the catalyst for authentic leadership development (Gardner et al. 2005). The authors identify self-awareness and self-regulation as two fundamental components of authentic leadership development and they discuss both these concepts in depth. Also at the heart of this article is the idea that authentic leaders are positive role models for followers and consistently model authentic behavior balanced processing self-awareness and transparency.\n\tThis article is a valuable resource in examining authentic leadership theory because it examines authentic leadership development using a reflective perspective which looks at the roles of both the leader and follower. The authors also clearly and succinctly define the various components of their authentic leadership model. One area for critique is that the authors don\u2019t provide any concrete examples of the outcomes they predict making the subject matter of the article entirely theoretical. \nHsieh C.-C. & Wang D.-S. The study focuses on the influence of authentic leadership on employee trust and engagement from a supervisor-employee perspective. Hsieh & Wang (2015) made four distinct hypothesis concerning employee and supervisor perceptions of authentic leadership and its mediatory relationship with employee trust and engagement. The study sample was taken from the responses of 77 supervisors and 345 employees from 36 of Taiwan\u2019s best performing companies (Hsieh & Wang 2015). The results of the study were quantified using study participants questionnaire responses which were then converted to statistical data and applied to a hierarchical linear model. Using this data the authors were able to conclude that \u201csupervisor-perceived authentic leadership has a fully mediating influence on employee work engagement through employee trust\u201d (Hsieh & Wang 2015 p. 2341).\n\tThis study is a valuable resource for authentic leadership theory because of its use of statistical data. The presentation of quantifiable results gives greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions. Hsieh & Wang\u2019s (2015) presentation of their authentic leadership research hypothesis test and findings present a clear picture of the application of authentic leadership and its probable outcomes.\nKerfoot K. Kerfoot (2006) presents the idea that leader authenticity cannot be self-defined it lies only in the perception of followers. The author also suggests that authenticity may be a character trait but then postulates that through mentoring and confidence one can create the perception of authenticity as a leader (Kerfoot 2006).\n\tThis composition clearly defines the author\u2019s idea of authentic leadership and its importance. While the article does state several arguable conjectures they are all supported by the cited references from other credible sources. http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=119180634&site=ehost-live\nThis article presents the findings of a research study concerning authentic leadership. Specifically the study examined the role of authentic leadership on employees developmental goals and the correlation between supervisor authentic leadership and employee performance (Mehmood et al. 2016). The authors put forth three distinct hypothesis which predict that authentic leadership positively predicts followers learning goal orientation and indirectly positively predicts followers performance and engagement. The study sample of participants included 115 supervisors and 345 employees in the Pakistani Telecommunications sector (Mehmood et al. 2016). Similar to the study conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) a questionnaire and statistical data was used to quantify the results. Mehmood et al. (2016) were able to conclude there is \u201cevidence that authentic leadership predicts followers' in\u2010role performance and civic virtue extra\u2010role performance through followers' LGO\u201d (p. 882).\n\tThis article is a credible source due to being published as part of peer-reviewed scholarly journal. Additionally the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors conclusions. One criticism of this source is that it does not discuss much of the research that the authors conducted in authentic leadership theory before they arrived at their hypothesis. The authors site an extensive list of credible sources from which they formulated their ideas but it may have been helpful for them to be more in-depth. \nQian J. Yang F. & Han Z. R. (2016). This composition describes how authentic leadership and employees\u2019 cognitive and emotive perspectives influence feedback-seeking behaviors. Qian et al. (2016) argue \u201cthat authentic leadership influences feedback seeking indirectly through employees\u2019 perceptions about value and cost\u201d (p.4 82). They also put forth a model where authentic leadership correlates with employee positive emotions thereby indirectly fostering feedback-seeking behavior (Qian et al. 2016).\n\tThe article provides a focused view of authentic leadership and how it correlates with feedback-seeking behaviors. The authors cite an extensive amount of credible sources and literature to support their claims but at times this may cause a reader to get the sense that they\u2019re not putting forth any new ideas. One criticism of the composition is that due to its focused view some portions of the article seem almost redundant.\nRego A. Vit\u00f3ria A. Magalh\u00e3es A. Ribeiro N. & e Cunha M. P. (2013). The Leadership Quarterly 24(1) \t61\u201379. <LINK> https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2012.08.002\nThis peer-reviewed article concerns a study which examines how authentic leadership predicts team potency both directly and indirectly. Rego et al. (2013) suggests that authentic leadership alone \u201cis not sufficient to achieve positive team outcomes\u201d (p. 62). The authors assert that team affective commitment and team virtuousness may also be a link between authentic leadership and team potency. Therefore the study also explores the mediatory role of team affective commitment and virtuousness. The study was conducted at a Portuguese university with 59 teams of sizes ranging from 4-21 members. Similar to the study conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) as well as Mehmood et al. (2016) a questionnaire

and statistical data was used to quantify the results. Rogo et al. (2013) were able to conclude that \u201cthe findings suggest that AL [authentic leadership] predicts team potency via the mediating role of team virtuousness and team affective commitment\u201d (p. 75).\n\tMany of the studies which concern themselves with the effects of authentic leadership focus on individual follower outcomes. This study is rare in that is examines the effects of authentic leadership on group outcomes. This rarity makes it an exceptional resource for authentic leadership theory research. The authors described the concepts of authentic leadership which lead to their hypothesis in detail which provided ample supplementary information on their study topic. As with the studies conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) as well as Mehmood et al. (2016) the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors conclusions. \nShapira-Lishchinsky O. (2014). Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014) was able to conclude that TBSs provide a framework for ethical discussion but did not ever establish a firm correlation between authentic leadership development in educational leaders and TBSs.\n\tAlthough this study is peer reviewed its results were not presented in the form of quantifiable data. While the study did include detailed research relating to authentic leadership and also clearly stated its methodology ultimately it is not the best resource for the study of authentic leadership theory. The author cites authentic leadership theory as a key method for achieving a better quality of leadership. Wullffers (2017) states that \u201cauthentic leaders are leaders who know who they are and who are true to themselves\u201d (p. 7). The book examines what authentic leadership is from a scholarly perspective and cites multiple literary works concerning the mechanisms of authentic leadership. The author then examines the components and methodologies of authentic leadership development. Wullffers (2017) describes leader authenticity as a spectrum with \u201cleadership development levels of maturity that shape the moral and cognitive capacities\u201d (p. 57) of leaders. The author then goes on to discuss how leaders may navigate up developmental levels. Finally Wulffers (2017) examines well known leaders through the lens of authentic leadership (p. 208).\n\tWhile the author does make some assertions this book functions mainly as an extended case study and detailed manual on how to achieve leader authenticity. The author heavily references previous literature on authentic leadership theory as well as her own experiences to formulate her ideas. The book includes several appendices and end-notes which enhance its usefulness in authentic leadership theory research. Wullffers is also lent a greater credibility through endorsements and reviews by industry leaders.\n\n\n\n\t\n\n\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2005.03.001""]\n[URL: "direct=true&db=bsh&AN=96695857&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: "direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=987184&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=17426678&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=108302656&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=108302656&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: "live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=119180634&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1007/s12144-015-9316-z""]\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2012.08.002""]\n[URL: """"]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=1595178&site=ehost-live""]", "title": "annotated bib LL-1.docx", "tether_id": null}, "status": "finished_successfully", "end_turn": null, "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"command": "context_stuff", "is_visually_hidden_from_conversation": true, "message_type": null, "model_slug": "gpt-4", "default_model_slug": "gpt-4", "parent_id": "557f34ed-65ed-479f-8a17-9bdd143bb74e", "request_id": "8ae4415c3ebd3744-MXP", "timestamp_": "absolute"}, "recipient": "all", "channel": null}, "parent": "557f34ed-65ed-479f-8a17-9bdd143bb74e", "children": ["0144aeff-f128-47e1-9878-9b22ff0ee388"]}, "0144aeff-f128-47e1-9878-9b22ff0ee388": {"id": "0144aeff-f128-47e1-9878-9b22ff0ee388", "message": {"id": "0144aeff-f128-47e1-9878-9b22ff0ee388", "author": {"role": "tool", "name": "myfiles_browser", "metadata": {}}, "create_time": 1722834374.915274, "update_time": null, "content": {"content_type": "tether_quote", "url": "file-R4Ib3DbWJGAIjqEOOwQjkeza", "domain": "literature review ll.docx", "text": "Authentic Leadership Literature Review\n\n\nAlexis Lindsay\nClaremont Lincoln University\nMLE 5323-01: Leadership Literacy\nJudge Tonia Cutchin\nAugust 1 2021\n\nAuthentic Leadership Literature Review\nAccording to Northouse (2019) \u201cPeople feel apprehensive and insecure about what is going on around them and as a result they long for bona fide leadership they can trust and for leaders who are honest and good\u201d (p. 197). In this world of uncertainty where workers are demanding greater accountability and morality from their leadership the need for authentic leadership is undeniable. Indeed this demand people feel to be led by those purpose-driven individuals with strict moral compasses is evident. \nAlthough authentic leadership is still nascent in its philosophy (Northouse 2019) many of the greatest minds in academia commerce and even science have written literature studying hypothesizing and postulating on its methodology application and efficacy. For example Gardner et al.

(2005) Berkovich (2010) and Qian et al. (2016) sought to examine the methodology and social mechanisms by which authentic leadership operated while Rego et al. (2013) Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014) Hsieh and Wang (2015) and Mehmood et al. (2016) tested its efficacy and application. (2005) contends that \u201cthe purpose of this article is to further develop and extend an emerging theory of authentic leadership development\u201d (p. 344). The authors begin by defining their interpretation of the constructs of authenticity authentic leadership and authentic followership. Gardner et al. (2005) then discuss a conceptual authentic leadership framework for leader and follower development. \n Gardner et al. (2005) propose what they describe as a \u201cself-based model of the developmental processes for authentic leadership and followership\u201d (p. 348). This model sets forth the idea that a leader\u2019s personal history is the catalyst for authentic leadership development (Gardner et al. 2005). In addition the authors identify self-awareness and self-regulation as two fundamental components of authentic leadership development and they discuss both these concepts in depth. Also at the heart of this article is the idea that authentic leaders are positive role models for followers and consistently model authentic behavior balanced processing self-awareness and transparency.\n\tThis article is a valuable resource in examining authentic leadership theory because it examines authentic leadership development using a reflective perspective that looks at the roles of both the leader and follower. The authors also clearly and succinctly define the various components of their authentic leadership model. However one area for critique is that the authors do not provide concrete examples of the outcomes they predict making the article\u2019s subject matter entirely theoretical. \nAnother scholarly literary work concerning the exploration of authentic leadership theory and its methodology is an article by Berkovich titled \u201cBetween Person and Person: Dialogical Pedagogy in Authentic Leadership Development\u201d first published in the Academy of Management Learning & Education journal in 2014. Within this article Berkovich (2014) suggests that dialogical pedagogy can be used to develop authentic leadership. In addition he examines critiques and summarizes common approaches and ideas held in the academic community regarding authentic leadership theory and development. \nBerkovich (2014) identifies and discusses the two central focuses \u2018narrative identity processing\u2019 and \u2018dramaturgical enactment\u2019 of the main didactic methods for authentic leadership development. He then suggests a new perspective based on dialogical philosophy and outlines a proposed framework for dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership. Berkovich (2010) identifies eight areas of dialogical pedagogy which he asserts are useful in authentic leadership development: care contact critical thinking empathy mutuality open-mindedness respect and self-exposure. Finally the article evaluates and critiques the use and outcomes of using dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership development initiatives.\n\tBerkovich\u2019s (2014) discourses were helpful in that the author first defined his view of the current perspectives in authentic leadership before exploring a new perspective. The article discusses the foundations and mechanics of dialogical pedagogy in-depth which helps the reader understand the author\u2019s overall argument and ideas. \nIn contrast to the scholarly works by Gardner et al. (2005) and Berkovich (2014) the article titled \u201cThe Influencing Mechanisms of Authentic Leadership on Feedback-Seeking Behaviour: A Cognitive/Emotive Model\u201d published in 2015 by Qian et al. functions almost as both a long-form hypothesis and authentic leadership methodology model. The article suggests that a critical influencing mechanism on feedback-seeking behavior in the leader-follower dyadic relationship is through followers\u2019 cognitive and emotive processes. \nThis composition describes how authentic leadership and employees\u2019 cognitive and emotive perspectives influence feedback-seeking behaviors. Qian et al. (2016) argue \u201cthat authentic leadership influences feedback-seeking indirectly through employees\u2019 perceptions about value and cost\u201d (p.4 82). They also put forth a model where authentic leadership correlates with positive employee emotions thereby indirectly fostering feedback-seeking behavior (Qian et al. 2016).\n\tThe article provides a focused view of authentic leadership and how it correlates with feedback-seeking behaviors. The authors cite an extensive amount of credible sources and literature to support their claims but this may cause a reader to get the sense that they are not putting forth any new ideas. One criticism of the composition is that some portions of the article seem almost redundant due to its focused view.\nStudies on the Application Development and Effects of Authentic Leadership\nIn contrast to the other articles mentioned about authentic leadership studies this peer-reviewed journal article by Rego et al. (2013) focuses on group outcomes. The study examines how authentic leadership predicts team potency both directly and indirectly. Rego et al. (2013) suggest that authentic leadership alone \u201cis not sufficient to achieve positive team outcomes\u201d (p. 62). The authors assert that team affective commitment and team virtuousness may also link authentic leadership and team potency. Therefore the study also explores the mediatory role of team affective commitment and virtuousness. The authors described the concepts of authentic leadership which led to their hypotheses in detail and provided ample supplementary information on their study topic.\nThe study was conducted at a Portuguese university with 59 teams ranging from 4-21 members. The results were quantified using questionnaires and statistical data. As a result Rogo et al. (2013) were able to conclude that \u201cthe findings suggest that AL [authentic leadership] predicts team potency via the mediating role of team virtuousness and team affective commitment\u201d (p. 75). As with many other studies referenced the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions.\nAs previously stated many of the studies which concern themselves with the effects of authentic leadership focus on individual follower outcomes. This study is rare in that it examines the effects of authentic leadership on group outcomes. This rarity makes it an exceptional resource for authentic leadership theory research. \nAnother noteworthy peer-reviewed article examining authentic leadership concerns a study conducted \u201cto identify whether principal trainees can develop authentic leadership through processing decisions that they or their peers made in TBSs [team based simulations] of ethical cases that they or their peers had experienced\u201d (Shapira-Lishchinsky 2014 p. 987) in the educational field.

The study found two main advantages of TBSs: TBSs create a supportive environment to learn from participant mistakes and TBSs heightened educational leader awareness of their caring responsibilities. However while Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014) concluded that TBSs provide a framework for ethical discussion the author did not establish a strong correlation between authentic leadership development in educational leaders and TBSs.\n\tAlthough this study is peer-reviewed its results were not presented in the form of quantifiable data. Thus while the article did include a detailed analysis of authentic leadership theory and its methodology it is ultimately not the best resource for authentic leadership research. However many of the examples presented pertained to ethical moral dilemmas that could easily correlate with authentic leadership theory through conjecture and deduction.\nHsieh and Wang (2015) conducted another compelling study into the effects of authentic leadership in organizations. The study focused on the influence of authentic leadership on employee trust and engagement from a supervisor-employee perspective (Hsieh & Wang 2015). The study tested four distinct hypotheses concerning employee and supervisor perceptions of authentic leadership and its mediatory relationship with employee trust and engagement (H\nThe file is too long and its contents have been truncated.\n", "title": "literature review ll.docx", "tether_id": null}, "status": "finished_successfully", "end_turn": null, "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"command": "context_stuff", "is_visually_hidden_from_conversation": true, "message_type": null, "model_slug": "gpt-4", "default_model_slug": "gpt-4", "parent_id": "94e0a14b-725f-4932-b9f2-beaaaba375e0", "request_id": "8ae4415c3ebd3744-MXP", "timestamp_": "absolute"}, "recipient": "all", "channel": null}, "parent": "94e0a14b-725f-4932-b9f2-beaaaba375e0", "children": ["f2693216-787f-4efa-8759-409929f8ce7b"]}, "f2693216-787f-4efa-8759-409929f8ce7b": {"id": "f2693216-787f-4efa-8759-409929f8ce7b", "message": {"id": "f2693216-787f-4efa-8759-409929f8ce7b", "author": {"role": "tool", "name": "myfiles_browser", "metadata": {}}, "create_time": 1722834374.91539, "update_time": null, "content": {"content_type": "text", "parts": ["\nPlease remember to search the user's documents if an answer to their question is not contained in the above snippets.\n"]}, "status": "finished_successfully", "end_turn": null, "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"is_visually_hidden_from_conversation": true, "command": "prompt", "message_type": null, "model_slug": "gpt-4", "default_model_slug": "gpt-4", "pad": "AAA", "parent_id": "0144aeff-f128-47e1-9878-9b22ff0ee388", "request_id": "8ae4415c3ebd3744-MXP", "timestamp_": "absolute"}, "recipient": "all", "channel": null}, "parent": "0144aeff-f128-47e1-9878-9b22ff0ee388", "children": ["3b4548a9-0d24-43e5-9280-511b089625af"]}, "3b4548a9-0d24-43e5-9280-511b089625af": {"id": "3b4548a9-0d24-43e5-9280-511b089625af", "message": {"id": "3b4548a9-0d24-43e5-9280-511b089625af", "author": {"role": "assistant", "name": null, "metadata": {}}, "create_time": 1722834374.915686, "update_time": null, "content": {"content_type": "text", "parts": ["Let's work on rewriting and expanding your literature review based on your current and additional sources, focusing on the theme of social media as a tool for societal change and its role in shaping public opinion.\n\nHere's a structured approach we can take for your Chapter 3:\n\n### Chapter 3: Literature Review\n\n#### Introduction\n- Opening Quote: Use the engaging introductory paragraph you provided about the limited societal memory and the contrast with academic studies on social media's effects, leadership, and authenticity.\n\n#### Synthesis of Existing Literature\n- Themes from Existing Literature: Discuss the common themes from your previous literature review and annotated bibliography. In this world of uncertainty, where workers are demanding greater accountability and morality from their leadership, the need for authentic leadership is undeniable. Indeed, this demand people feel to be led by those purpose-driven individuals with strict moral compasses is evident. \nAlthough authentic leadership is still nascent in its philosophy (Northouse, 2019), many of the greatest minds in academia, commerce, and even science have written literature studying, hypothesizing, and postulating on its methodology, application, and efficacy. For example, Gardner et al. (2005), Berkovich (2010), and Qian et al. (2016) sought to examine the methodology and social mechanisms by which authentic leadership operated while Rego et al. (2013), Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014), Hsieh and Wang (2015), and Mehmood et al. (2016) tested its efficacy and application. Even outside of academia, experts have found the topic of authentic leadership compelling. For instance, both Blekkingh (2015) and Wulffers (2017) have written entire books dedicated to the question of how to find your purpose and achieve authenticity, while Kerfoot\u2019s (2006) application of authentic leadership theory in nursing is brilliant in its simplicity! \nThis paper will summarize, critique, and evaluate each of the literary works referenced in turn. Furthermore, each literary work will be critiqued on the basis of its academic robustness or usefulness to research concerning authentic leadership. Finally, this treatise will examine the credibility of the authors and their writing concerning the subject matter on the whole.\nLiterature Review\nAcademic Discourses on Leadership Theory and Methodology\nIn their article titled, \u201c\u2018Can you see the real me?\u2019 A self-based model of authentic leader and follower development,\u201d Gardner et al. (2005) contends that \u201cthe purpose of this article is to further develop and extend an emerging theory of authentic leadership development\u201d (p. 344). The authors begin by defining their interpretation of the constructs of authenticity, authentic leadership, and authentic followership. Gardner et al. (2005) then discuss a conceptual authentic leadership framework for leader and follower development. \n Gardner et al. (2005) propose what they describe as a \u201cself-based model of the developmental processes for authentic leadership and followership\u201d (p. 348). This model sets forth the idea that a leader\u2019s personal history is the catalyst for authentic leadership development (Gardner et al., 2005). In addition, the authors identify self-awareness and self-regulation as two fundamental components of authentic leadership development, and they discuss both these concepts in depth. Also at the heart of this article is the idea that authentic leaders are positive role models for followers and consistently model authentic behavior, balanced processing, self-awareness, and transparency.\n\tThis article is a valuable resource in examining authentic leadership theory because it examines authentic leadership development using a reflective perspective that looks at the roles of both the leader and follower. The authors also clearly and succinctly define the various components of their authentic leadership model. However, one area for critique is that the authors do not provide concrete examples of the outcomes they predict, making the article\u2019s subject matter entirely theoretical. \nAnother scholarly literary work concerning the exploration of authentic leadership theory and its methodology is an article by Berkovich titled \u201cBetween Person and Person: Dialogical Pedagogy in Authentic Leadership Development,\u201d first published in the Academy of Management Learning & Education journal in 2014. Within this article, Berkovich (2014) suggests that dialogical pedagogy can be used to develop authentic leadership. In addition, he examines, critiques, and summarizes common approaches and ideas held in the academic community regarding authentic leadership theory and development. \nBerkovich (2014) identifies and discusses the two central focuses, \u2018narrative identity processing\u2019 and \u2018dramaturgical enactment,\u2019 of the main didactic methods for authentic leadership development. He then suggests a new perspective based on dialogical philosophy and outlines a proposed framework for dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership. Berkovich (2010) identifies eight areas of dialogical pedagogy which he asserts are useful in authentic leadership development: care, contact, critical thinking, empathy, mutuality, open-mindedness, respect, and self-exposure. Finally, the article evaluates and critiques the use and outcomes of using dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership development initiatives.\n\tBerkovich\u2019s (2014) discourses were helpful in that the author first defined his view of the current perspectives in authentic leadership before exploring a new perspective. The article discusses the foundations and mechanics of dialogical pedagogy in-depth, which helps the reader understand the author\u2019s overall argument and ideas. \nIn contrast to the scholarly works by Gardner et al. (2005) and Berkovich (2014), the article titled \u201cThe Influencing Mechanisms of Authentic Leadership on Feedback-Seeking Behaviour: A Cognitive/Emotive Model,\u201d published in 2015 by Qian et al. functions almost as both a long-form hypothesis and authentic leadership methodology model. The article suggests that a critical influencing mechanism on feedback-seeking behavior in the leader-follower dyadic relationship is through followers\u2019 cognitive and emotive processes. \nThis composition describes how authentic leadership and employees\u2019 cognitive and emotive perspectives influence feedback-seeking behaviors. Qian et al. (2016) argue \u201cthat authentic leadership influences feedback-seeking indirectly through employees\u2019 perceptions about value and cost\u201d (p.4 82). They also put forth a model where authentic leadership correlates with positive employee emotions, thereby indirectly fostering feedback-seeking behavior (Qian et al., 2016).\n\tThe article provides a focused view of authentic leadership and how it correlates with feedback-seeking behaviors. The authors cite an extensive amount of credible sources and literature to support their claims, but this may cause a reader to get the sense that they are not putting forth any new ideas. One criticism of the composition is that some portions of the article seem almost redundant due to its focused view.\nStudies on the Application, Development, and Effects of Authentic Leadership\nIn contrast to the other articles mentioned about authentic leadership studies, this peer-reviewed journal article by Rego et al. (2013) focuses on group outcomes. The study examines how authentic leadership predicts team potency both directly and indirectly. Rego et al. (2013) suggest that authentic leadership alone \u201cis not sufficient to achieve positive team outcomes\u201d (p. 62). The authors assert that team affective commitment and team virtuousness may also link authentic leadership and team potency. Therefore, the study also explores the mediatory role of team affective commitment and virtuousness. The authors described the concepts of authentic leadership, which led to their hypotheses in detail and provided ample supplementary information on their study topic.\nThe study was conducted at a Portuguese university with 59 teams ranging from 4-21 members. The results were quantified using questionnaires and statistical data. As a result, Rogo et al. (2013) were able to conclude that \u201cthe findings suggest that AL [authentic leadership] predicts team potency via the mediating role of team virtuousness and team affective commitment\u201d (p. 75). As with many other studies referenced, the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions.\nAs previously stated, many of the studies which concern themselves with the effects of authentic leadership focus on individual follower outcomes. This study is rare in that it examines the effects of authentic leadership on group outcomes. This rarity makes it an exceptional resource for authentic leadership theory research. \nAnother noteworthy peer-reviewed article examining authentic leadership concerns a study conducted \u201cto identify whether principal trainees can develop authentic leadership through processing decisions that they or their peers made in TBSs [team based simulations] of ethical cases that they or their peers had experienced\u201d (Shapira-Lishchinsky, 2014, p. 987) in the educational field. The study found two main advantages of TBSs: TBSs create a supportive environment to learn from participant mistakes, and TBSs heightened educational leader awareness of their caring responsibilities. However, while Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014) concluded that TBSs provide a framework for ethical discussion, the author did not establish a strong correlation between authentic leadership development in educational leaders and TBSs.\n\tAlthough this study is peer-reviewed, its results were not presented in the form of quantifiable data. Thus, while the article did include a detailed analysis of authentic leadership theory and its methodology, it is ultimately not the best resource for authentic leadership research. However, many of the examples presented pertained to ethical, moral dilemmas that could easily correlate with authentic leadership theory through conjecture and deduction.\nHsieh and Wang (2015) conducted another compelling study into the effects of authentic leadership in organizations. The study focused on the influence of authentic leadership on employee trust and engagement from a supervisor-employee perspective (Hsieh & Wang, 2015). The study tested four distinct hypotheses concerning employee and supervisor perceptions of authentic leadership and its mediatory relationship with employee trust and engagement (Hsieh & Wang, 2015). \nThe study sample took the responses of 77 supervisors and 345 employees from 36 of Taiwan\u2019s best-performing companies (Hsieh & Wang, 2015). Results of the study, along with the methodology and initial hypotheses, were published in a peer-reviewed journal article. Results were quantified using study participants\u2019 questionnaire responses and then converted to statistical data and applied to a hierarchical linear model. Using this data, the authors were able to conclude that \u201csupervisor-perceived authentic leadership has a fully mediating influence on employee work engagement through employee trust\u201d (Hsieh & Wang, 2015, p. 2341).\n\tThis study is a valuable resource for authentic leadership theory because of its prominent use of statistical data. In addition, Hsieh and Wang\u2019s (2015) presentation of quantifiable results gives greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions. Overall, the authors\u2019 research, hypotheses, test, and findings present a clear picture of the application of authentic leadership and its probable outcomes.\nIn contrast to the other authentic leadership studies done by Rego et al. (2013), Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014), and Hsieh and Wang (2015), which primarily focused on outcomes, Mehmood et al. (2016) research focus was on correlative relationships. Specifically, the study examined the role of authentic leadership in employees\u2019 developmental goals. In addition, the authors also sought to test the correlation between supervisors\u2019 authentic leadership and employee performance (Mehmood et al., 2016). \nThe authors put forth three distinct hypotheses which predicted that authentic leadership positively predicts followers\u2019 learning goal orientation and indirectly positively predicts followers\u2019 performance and engagement. The study sample of participants included 115 supervisors and 345 employees in the Pakistani Telecommunications sector (Mehmood et al., 2016). Similar to the study conducted by Rogo et al. (2013) and Hsieh and Wang (2015), results were quantified using a questionnaire and statistical data. Mehmood et al. (2016) concluded that there is \u201cevidence that authentic leadership predicts followers' in\u2010role performance and civic virtue extra\u2010role performance through followers' LGO\u201d (p. 882).\n\t As with most of the other studies referenced, the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions. However, one criticism of this source is that it does not discuss much of the research that the authors conducted in authentic leadership theory before they arrived at their hypothesis. Indeed, while the authors cite an extensive list of credible sources from which they formulated their ideas, it may have been helpful for them to discuss and perform a deeper analysis of those sources more before stating their hypotheses in the article.\nHow to Achieve Authenticity\nBlekkingh\u2019s (2015) book, titled Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission, explores the ideas present in authentic leadership theory with the intent to use them as a tool for discovering one\u2019s purpose. Blekkingh (2015) approaches his topic through a seven-layer model, which he postulates is the framework of all human beings. In chapter discussion order, these seven layers are environment, behavior, skills, norms, ego, values, and authenticity.\nEach of the initial seven chapters focused on one of these layers and the problems associated with each layer. Blekkingh (2015) suggests that through this layered self-reflection, one can find their authentic self and purpose. He presents the idea that once an individual is aware of their authentic self and purpose, they will be able to \u201cput Authentic Leadership into effect\u201d (Blekkingh, 2015, p. x). Finally, he concludes the book with resources for further exploration and includes a lengthy appendix that functions as a kind of encyclopedia with supplemental materials.\n\tThe author is a credible source in authentic leadership theory due to his work as both an authentic leadership lecturer at a Dutch university and as one of the founders of a consultancy firm centered around the tenets of authentic leadership. However, one failing of the book as an authentic leadership resource is that many of the examples in the book are mainly anecdotal and lack academic or scientific robustness. In contrast, the author\u2019s simple language and engaging exercises make his ideas and pedagogy easily understood and applicable to anyone.\nIn contrast to Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) writing, Wulffers\u2019s (2017) book begins by commenting on the state of leadership today and also examining the consequences of poor leadership. The book, titled Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching Approach, is similar to Blekkingh\u2019s book in that it also focuses on achieving authenticity. The author cites authentic leadership theory as a key method for achieving a better quality of leadership. \nWullffers (2017) examines what authentic leadership is from a scholarly perspective and cites multiple literary works concerning the mechanisms of authentic leadership. She then examines the components and methodologies of authentic leadership development. First, the author states that \u201cauthentic leaders are leaders who know who they are and who are true to themselves\u201d (Wulffers, 2017, p. 7). Next, she describes leader authenticity as a spectrum with \u201cleadership development levels of maturity that shape the moral and cognitive capacities\u201d (p. 57) of leaders. The author then goes on to discuss how leaders may navigate up developmental levels. Finally, Wulffers (2017) examines well-known leaders through the lens of authentic leadership (p. 208).\n\t Wulffers (2017) heavily references previous literature on authentic leadership theory to support her assertions. While the author presents some new ideas, this book functions mainly as an extended case study and detailed manual on achieving authenticity. She also relies heavily on her own experiences to present concrete examples illustrating the book\u2019s concepts and ideas. Wullffers is also lent greater credibility through endorsements and testimonials by industry leaders. Finally, the book includes several appendices and end-notes which enhance its usefulness in authentic leadership theory research. \nPutting Authenticity to Work\nAuthentic leadership isn\u2019t just a philosophy or theory. It isn\u2019t just useful for experts and scholars. Even without being an appointed leader\u2014or reading or writing books on the subject\u2014ordinary people can use the tenets of authentic leadership to improve many aspects of their professional life. For example, Kerfoot (2006) wrote a compelling article detailing the practical applications of authentic leadership theory in the nursing profession.\nKerfoot\u2019s (2006) peer-reviewed journal article discusses authentic leadership development in the context of the nursing profession. Kerfoot (2006) presents the idea that leader authenticity cannot be self-defined; it lies only in followers\u2019 perceptions. The author also suggests that authenticity may be a character trait but then postulates that through mentoring and confidence, one can create the perception of authenticity as a leader (Kerfoot, 2006).\n\tThe composition clearly defines the author\u2019s idea of authentic leadership and its importance. Moreover, while the article states several arguable conjectures, they are supported by the cited references from other credible sources. Thus, this article is relevant and helpful to any authentic leadership research in that it gives context to\u2014and an application of\u2014authentic leadership theory in a specific profession. \nAlthough authentic leadership theory is still considered a developing philosophy, various treatises, studies, and books have been written examining its application, development, and efficacy. However, much is still unknown about the mechanisms by which authentic leadership functions, and even less is certain about how to achieve authenticity. Even so, one central theme is observed through the breath of all authentic leadership literature: authentic leaders are ethically moral bound and purpose-driven. \n\n\nReferences\nBERKOVICH, I. The initial seven chapters are each focused on one of these layers and the problems associated with each layer. Blekkingh (2015) suggests that through this layered self reflection one is enabled to find their authentic self and their purpose. He presents the idea that this once an individual is aware of their authentic self and purpose they will be able to \u201cput Authentic Leadership into effect\u201d (Blekkingh 2015 p. x). Finally he concludes the book with resources for further exploration and includes a lengthy appendix that functions as kind of encyclopedia with supplemental materials.\n\tThe author is a credible source in the field of authentic leadership theory due to his work as both an authentic leadership lecturer at a Dutch university and as one of the founders of a consultancy firm centered around the tenets of authentic leadership. One failing of the book as Authentic Leadership resource is that many of the examples in the book are mainly anecdotal and lack an academic or scientific robustness. In contrast the authors simple language and engaging exercises make his ideas and pedagogy easily understood and applicable to anyone.\nGardner W. L. Avolio B. J. Luthans F. May D. R. & Walumbwa F. (2005). \u201cCan you see the real \tme?\u201d A self-based model of authentic leader and follower development. Leadership Quarterly \t16(3) 343\u2013372. Business Source Elite. \n\t <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx <LINK> ?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=17426678&site=ehostlive\nGardner et al. (2005) contend that \u201cthe purpose of this article is to further develop and extend an emerging theory of authentic leadership development\u201d (p. 344). The authors begin by defining their interpretation of the constructs of authenticity authentic leadership and authentic followership. Gardner et al (2005) then discuss a conceptual authentic leadership framework for leader and follower development. Gardner et al (2005) propose what they describe as a \u201cself-based model of the developmental processes for authentic leadership and followership\u201d (p. 348). This model sets forth the idea that a leader\u2019s personal history is the catalyst for authentic leadership development (Gardner et al. 2005). The authors identify self-awareness and self-regulation as two fundamental components of authentic leadership development and they discuss both these concepts in depth. Also at the heart of this article is the idea that authentic leaders are positive role models for followers and consistently model authentic behavior balanced processing self-awareness and transparency.\n\tThis article is a valuable resource in examining authentic leadership theory because it examines authentic leadership development using a reflective perspective which looks at the roles of both the leader and follower. The authors also clearly and succinctly define the various components of their authentic leadership model. One area for critique is that the authors don\u2019t provide any concrete examples of the outcomes they predict making the subject matter of the article entirely theoretical. \nHsieh C.-C. & Wang D.-S. (2015). Does supervisor-perceived authentic leadership influence \temployee work engagement through employee-perceived authentic leadership and employee \ttrust? International Journal of Human Resource Management 26(18) 2329\u20132348. Business \tSource Elite. <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx <LINK> ? <LINK> \tdirect=true&db=bsh&AN=108302656&site=ehost-live\nThis journal article reports the findings methodology and initial hypothesis of a study concerning authentic leadership. The study focuses on the influence of authentic leadership on employee trust and engagement from a supervisor-employee perspective. Hsieh & Wang (2015) made four distinct hypothesis concerning employee and supervisor perceptions of authentic leadership and its mediatory relationship with employee trust and engagement. The study sample was taken from the responses of 77 supervisors and 345 employees from 36 of Taiwan\u2019s best performing companies (Hsieh & Wang 2015). The results of the study were quantified using study participants questionnaire responses which were then converted to statistical data and applied to a hierarchical linear model. Using this data the authors were able to conclude that \u201csupervisor-perceived authentic leadership has a fully mediating influence on employee work engagement through employee trust\u201d (Hsieh & Wang 2015 p. 2341).\n\tThis study is a valuable resource for authentic leadership theory because of its use of statistical data. The presentation of quantifiable results gives greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions. Hsieh & Wang\u2019s (2015) presentation of their authentic leadership research hypothesis test and findings present a clear picture of the application of authentic leadership and its probable outcomes.\nKerfoot K. Academic Search \tElite. <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=afh&AN=23659813&site=ehost- \tlive\nThis peer-reviewed journal article discusses authentic leadership development in the context of the nursing profession. Kerfoot (2006) presents the idea that leader authenticity cannot be self-defined it lies only in the perception of followers. The author also suggests that authenticity may be a character trait but then postulates that through mentoring and confidence one can create the perception of authenticity as a leader (Kerfoot 2006).\n\tThis composition clearly defines the author\u2019s idea of authentic leadership and its importance. While the article does state several arguable conjectures they are all supported by the cited references from other credible sources. This article is relevant and helpful to any authentic leadership research in that it gives context to\u2014and an application of\u2014authentic leadership theory in a specific profession.\nMehmood Q. Hamstra M. R. W. Nawab S. & Vriend T. (2016). Business Source Elite. \t <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=119180634&site=ehost-live\nThis article presents the findings of a research study concerning authentic leadership. Specifically the study examined the role of authentic leadership on employees developmental goals and the correlation between supervisor authentic leadership and employee performance (Mehmood et al. 2016). The authors put forth three distinct hypothesis which predict that authentic leadership positively predicts followers learning goal orientation and indirectly positively predicts followers performance and engagement. The study sample of participants included 115 supervisors and 345 employees in the Pakistani Telecommunications sector (Mehmood et al. 2016). Similar to the study conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) a questionnaire and statistical data was used to quantify the results. Mehmood et al. (2016) were able to conclude there is \u201cevidence that authentic leadership predicts followers' in\u2010role performance and civic virtue extra\u2010role performance through followers' LGO\u201d (p. 882).\n\tThis article is a credible source due to being published as part of peer-reviewed scholarly journal. Additionally the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors conclusions. One criticism of this source is that it does not discuss much of the research that the authors conducted in authentic leadership theory before they arrived at their hypothesis. The authors site an extensive list of credible sources from which they formulated their ideas but it may have been helpful for them to be more in-depth. \nQian J. Yang F. & Han Z. R. (2016). WorldCat.org. \t <LINK> https://doi.org/10.1007/s12144-015-9316-z\nThe article suggests that a key influencing mechanism on feedback-seeking behavior in the leader-follower dyadic relationship is through followers cognitive and emotive processes. This composition describes how authentic leadership and employees\u2019 cognitive and emotive perspectives influence feedback-seeking behaviors. Qian et al. (2016) argue \u201cthat authentic leadership influences feedback seeking indirectly through employees\u2019 perceptions about value and cost\u201d (p.4 82). They also put forth a model where authentic leadership correlates with employee positive emotions thereby indirectly fostering feedback-seeking behavior (Qian et al. 2016).\n\tThe article provides a focused view of authentic leadership and how it correlates with feedback-seeking behaviors. The authors cite an extensive amount of credible sources and literature to support their claims but at times this may cause a reader to get the sense that they\u2019re not putting forth any new ideas. One criticism of the composition is that due to its focused view some portions of the article seem almost redundant.\nRego A. Vit\u00f3ria A. Magalh\u00e3es A. Ribeiro N. & e Cunha M. P. (2013). committed and potent teams? The Leadership Quarterly 24(1) \t61\u201379. <LINK> https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2012.08.002\nThis peer-reviewed article concerns a study which examines how authentic leadership predicts team potency both directly and indirectly. Rego et al. (2013) suggests that authentic leadership alone \u201cis not sufficient to achieve positive team outcomes\u201d (p. 62). The authors assert that team affective commitment and team virtuousness may also be a link between authentic leadership and team potency. Therefore the study also explores the mediatory role of team affective commitment and virtuousness. The study was conducted at a Portuguese university with 59 teams of sizes ranging from 4-21 members. Similar to the study conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) as well as Mehmood et al. (2016) a questionnaire and statistical data was used to quantify the results. Rogo et al. (2013) were able to conclude that \u201cthe findings suggest that AL [authentic leadership] predicts team potency via the mediating role of team virtuousness and team affective commitment\u201d (p. 75).\n\tMany of the studies which concern themselves with the effects of authentic leadership focus on individual follower outcomes. This study is rare in that is examines the effects of authentic leadership on group outcomes. This rarity makes it an exceptional resource for authentic leadership theory research. The authors described the concepts of authentic leadership which lead to their hypothesis in detail which provided ample supplementary information on their study topic. As with the studies conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) as well as Mehmood et al. (2016) the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors conclusions. \nShapira-Lishchinsky O. (2014). The study found that there were 2 main advantages of TBSs: TBSs create a supportive environment to learn from participant mistakes and TBSs heightened educational leader awareness of their caring responsibilities. Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014) was able to conclude that TBSs provide a framework for ethical discussion but did not ever establish a firm correlation between authentic leadership development in educational leaders and TBSs.\n\tAlthough this study is peer reviewed its results were not presented in the form of quantifiable data. While the study did include detailed research relating to authentic leadership and also clearly stated its methodology ultimately it is not the best resource for the study of authentic leadership theory. It does however provide ample information and examples which could be correlated with authentic leadership theory through conjecture and deduction.\nWulffers T. (2017). Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching \tApproach. KR Publishing; eBook Collection (EBSCOhost). \t <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=1595178&site=ehost-live\nWullffers (2017) begins by commenting on the state of leadership today and also examining the consequences of poor leadership. The author cites authentic leadership theory as a key method for achieving a better quality of leadership. Wullffers (2017) states that \u201cauthentic leaders are leaders who know who they are and who are true to themselves\u201d (p. 7). The book examines what authentic leadership is from a scholarly perspective and cites multiple literary works concerning the mechanisms of authentic leadership. The author then examines the components and methodologies of authentic leadership development. Wullffers (2017) describes leader authenticity as a spectrum with \u201cleadership development levels of maturity that shape the moral and cognitive capacities\u201d (p. 57) of leaders. The author then goes on to discuss how leaders may navigate up developmental levels. Finally Wulffers (2017) examines well known leaders through the lens of authentic leadership (p. 208).\n\tWhile the author does make some assertions this book functions mainly as an extended case study and detailed manual on how to achieve leader authenticity. The author heavily references previous literature on authentic leadership theory as well as her own experiences to formulate her ideas. The book includes several appendices and end-notes which enhance its usefulness in authentic leadership theory research. Wullffers is also lent a greater credibility through endorsements and reviews by industry leaders.\n\n\n\n\t\n\n\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2005.03.001""]\n[URL: "direct=true&db=bsh&AN=96695857&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: "direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=987184&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=17426678&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=108302656&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=108302656&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: "live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=119180634&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1007/s12144-015-9316-z""]\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2012.08.002""]\n[URL: """"]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=1595178&site=ehost-live""]", "title": "annotated bib LL-1.docx", "tether_id": null}, "status": "finished_successfully", "end_turn": null, "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"command": "context_stuff", "is_visually_hidden_from_conversation": true, "message_type": null, "model_slug": "gpt-4o", "default_model_slug": "gpt-4", "parent_id": "f9aae87c-c147-4920-8a0d-7c5d2ade7be3", "request_id": "8ae449e74f4a3744-MXP", "timestamp_": "absolute"}, "recipient": "all", "channel": null}, "parent": "f9aae87c-c147-4920-8a0d-7c5d2ade7be3", "children": ["aee79d11-e4d9-49c6-9cc6-f02cd8bb1538"]}, "aee79d11-e4d9-49c6-9cc6-f02cd8bb1538": {"id": "aee79d11-e4d9-49c6-9cc6-f02cd8bb1538", "message": {"id": "aee79d11-e4d9-49c6-9cc6-f02cd8bb1538", "author": {"role": "assistant", "name": null, "metadata": {}}, "create_time": 1722834761.28355, "update_time": null, "content": {"content_type": "code", "language": "json", "response_format_name": null, "text": "{"query": "social media tool for societal change", "year_min": 2019}"}, "status": "finished_successfully", "end_turn": false, "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"citations": [], "gizmo_id": "g-bo0FiWLY7",

In this special issue introductory article, we take stock of the robust multi-faceted nature of research and practice at the intersection of social media (SM) and innovation. We introduce the nine papers included in this special issue and highlight the rich variety of their contribution with reference to our organising framework. Diagnosing from a strategic perspective, we position SM strategy in and for innovation as an overlapping interaction between dynamic capabilities (sensing, seizing, reconfiguration) and the level of stakeholder engagement (macro, meso, micro). We explain how each interaction holds distinctive synergy in an open and collaborative innovation process. This organising framework shows how the malleable nature of SM creates opportunities for firms to engage widely distributed knowledge sources, enhance innovation capabilities and empower internal human resources towards an open and collaborative culture. However, social media research in B2B lacks a comprehensive overview from a strategic perspective, with most research to date having been focused on the tactical use of social media platforms, that is to say, in describing specific tools to implement a strategy. In the present systematic literature review we address this deficiency. Our findings reveal that prior B2B research predominately investigated social media as short-term tactics with context-specific limitations. Our thematic analysis extends beyond these boundaries and extracts from the literature three relationship-orientated themes in social media, namely their use as a tool for: 1) sales-facilitation, 2) integrated communication, and 3) employee engagement. These three themes are distinct yet interdependent and are each necessary if organizations are to develop a competitive advantage within the social media environment. The descriptive statistics and thematic analysis in the study present a set of five key findings that reflect the research gaps presently in the literature and thus highlight significant future research directions. OSNs alter how people communicate, make decisions, and form or change their beliefs, attitudes, and behaviors. Thus, they can now impact social groups, financial systems, and political communication at scale. As one type of OSN, social media platforms, such as Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube, serve as outlets for users to convey information to an audience as broad or targeted as the user desires. Over the years, these social media platforms have been infected with automated accounts, or bots, that are capable of hijacking conversations, influencing other users, and manipulating content dissemination. Although benign bots exist to facilitate legitimate activities, we focus on bots designed to perform malicious acts through social media platforms. Bots that mimic the social behaviors of humans are referred to as social bots. Social bots help automate sociotechnical behaviors, such as \u201cliking\u201d tweets, tweeting/retweeting a message, following users, and coordinating with or even competing against other bots. Some advanced social bots exhibit highly sophisticated traits of coordination and communication with complex organizational structures. This article presents a detailed survey of social bots, their types and behaviors, and how they impact social media, identification algorithms, and their coordination strategies in OSNs. The survey also discusses coordination in areas such as biological systems, interorganizational networks, and coordination games. The essence of data generated through social media is rooted in the connections and relationships it enables between firms and their stakeholders, and represents one of the greatest assets for data-driven innovation. As most of the firms are still experiencing and trailblazing in this matter, the current challenge is therefore to learn how to benefit from social media's potential for innovation purposes. In the last decade, research interest has increased towards understanding social media \u2013 innovation interactions. The reliance on the wisdom of the crowd in driving major business decisions and shaping society's way of life is now well acknowledged in academic and business literature. Social media is increasingly used as a tool to manage knowledge flows within and across organisation boundaries in the process of innovation. Yet, conceptualisation of social media and innovation interaction and a systematic review of how far the field has come remains providential. Therefore, through a systematic literature review we aim to identify research trends and gaps in the field, conceptualise current paradigmatic views and therein provide clear propositions to guide future research. Based on a systematic review, 111 articles published in peer-reviewed journals and found in EBSCO Host\u00ae and Scopus\u00ae databases are descriptively analysed, with results synthesized across current research trends. Findings suggest social media is seen as enabler and driver of innovation, with behavioural and resource based perspectives being the most popular theoretical lens used by researchers. They have redefined simple dyadic interactions between customers and marketers, transforming them into more complex interactions between multiple groups of actors, including customers, organisations, stakeholders, and non-customers. In recognition of the remodelling of customer engagement, scholars have called for additional research addressing the role of engagement in multi-actor ecosystems. Our study seeks to address this gap by advancing the understanding of the process of customer engagement on social media and proposing an empirically grounded framework with appropriate measures to assess customer engagement. Thirty-two interviews were conducted to explore the process of establishing and maintaining customer engagement on social media from the perspectives of social media marketing practitioners and users. Despite the relevance of this phenomenon to current hyper-competitive environments, empirical research on the topic remains scarce. To advance knowledge of this issue, the main purpose of the paper is to examine how Social Media use impacts the different dimensions of Corporate Entrepreneurship. Building on a sample of 201 technological firms, findings confirm that the use of Social Media tools impacted all dimensions of Corporate Entrepreneurship and enhanced firm performance. At the same time, social media platforms\u2014such as Instagram, Twitter, and Facebook\u2014have given the opportunity for the general public to share opinions and engage with the issue of climate change like never before. This phenomenon is considered to be a new form of soft power which can provide input into the discussion and possibly affect the current international political mechanisms. The present paper aims to (1) define the forms and characteristics of social media as a soft power method, (2) analyze its influence on the awareness of societies, and (3) assess if increased public awareness could influence the official political and policy processes. In order to assess if social media has influence on people\u2019s relative awareness, we have focused on analyzing the links between a few highly visible climate change related events and the trends in people\u2019s searches on the Internet in connection to those events. The study finds that even though it is difficult to assess the effects of social media as a soft power tool with certainty, there are visible links between social media and changing public perceptions, with the possibility of public opinion influencing political decision-making.","paper_authors":["Aleksandrina V. Management literature does not indicate clear and effective guidelines and policies detailing small marketing firms use of social media. The purpose of this qualitative case study was to explore the perceptions of small marketing firm leadersIn small businesses in the United States, specifically those with fewer than 10 employees, leaders may be skeptical of and resistant to the use of social media in their management operations. Management literature does not indicate clear and effective guidelines and policies detailing small marketing firms use of social media. The purpose of this qualitative case study was to explore the perceptions of small marketing firm leaders about the resources and knowledge needed for effective use of social media as a management tool. Emerson\u2019s social exchange theory grounded the study. The study targeted owners and managers of small marketing firms in Dallas, Texas, with three to five years of experience and firms who use social media in their firm management or operations. Twenty-three participants satisfied the criteria. Data were collected through interviews, questionnaires, and document reviews. Yin\u2019s 5-phase analysis was used to analyze the data. The primary result of the study is that small businesses that use social media in the Dallas, Texas, area reported various gains, including increased awareness about their business, valuable customer feedback, and customer retention. The study may have a positive social change impact by providing information on strategies and benefits of using social media as a management tool not only to small marketing firms in Texas, but also to very small businesses in other sectors. My father died when I was only 9 years old, but before his demise, he taught me the importance of education. He also taught me the importance of persistence and advised me to fight for whatever I desire persistently without giving up. My mother, on the other side, was the source of my inspiration to her deathbed. My mother dedicated her strength and energy to us after the death of my father and provided all our basic needs. She taught me to believe in God, stay positive, and avoid negative people in life. Even though they are not physically present in this world today to witness my graduation, I owe them for the foundation of knowledge, hope, and love that they instilled in me when I was young. Acknowledgments First, I want to thank my God

Almighty for His sufficient grace, His love, and the strength provided throughout this journey. Secondly, this journey would not have been possible without the encouragement and kind support from my committee chair, Dr. Teresa Lao; committee member, Dr. Anthony Lolas; and URR committee member, Dr. Robert Levasseur; and I would like to thank them for the time they invested in reading through my research and making constructive suggestions. I would also like to acknowledge all of the Walden University faculty members and staff for their professional support. I would also like to thank my beautiful wife, Florence, for standing by me and for her untiring support throughout this entire journey. Also, special thanks go to my children, Lorrene, Kathleen, Appolloh Jr., Nathan, Jadon, Loyce, Shelly, and Mercy. They allowed me to work late into the night and take time out of family outings and gatherings. Specifically, the young ones, who were always sitting under my desk to keep me company and would not go to sleep until I finished my work. I am truly thankful for all your support, love, and consideration. Your encouragement gave me the strength to continue the journey despite the challenges. I love you all.

Therefore, change leaders are more focused on exploring how they can create networking and socialization amongst major organizational stakeholders that can minimize detrimental cynicism and lobbying during change implementation. This study is an attempt to shed light on how Social Networking Applications (henceforth SNAs) can facilitate change implementation processes in the insurance sector.,The individual reaction and interaction realities during the change process cannot be discovered once and for all as there are varied perspectives on the same subjects. Therefore, a social constructionist position was used to understand the different realties of change managers and change recipients using the context of insurance sector.,The study documented how SNAs can play an active role in addressing the concerns of employees as well as managing and protecting knowledge sharing to facilitate the change implementation process. The collaborative and interactive nature of SNAs can enhance richness in knowledge sharing and can facilitate the participation of employees. Therefore, management should monitor these platforms as a means to improve the change process and to address the concerns of employees. These networking channels which include WhatsApp and Facebook can enhance social interactions, support and acceptance at individual and organizational levels.,Social media has become a familiar tool for employees to use to discuss internal changes and policies within their organizations. Social media enhances the richness, reach, knowledge exchange and effective internal communication potential amongst organizational change stakeholders. Using social media, change recipients are now more empowered and connected with their leadership that ever before. It is now easier to facilitate decision making during the change formulation and implementation process.,Social media applications have become necessary to ensure incremental and radical changes to the survival of dynamic businesses. The findings of this study are beneficial for change leaders and recipients of change to implement successful organizational change using social media tools. The effective and efficient use of social media applications helps organizations to foster knowledge amongst employees and they can address various critical issues, that is resistance to change, lower levels of knowledge sharing and support for change acceptance and lack of employee participation in decision making.,There is an inadequate understanding regarding how SNAs play a role in facilitating the change process in both public and private sector organizations. They allow affordable, targeted advertising for even the smallest brands and businesses, and enable easy two-way communication with customers and brand fans. In addition, they help businesses facilitate search, increase website traffic, and demonstrate brand values and cultural relevance in real time. Social media platforms allow brands to interact directly with individuals in the midst of the customer journey, influencing customer decision making and purchase. As social media platforms continue to transform and evolve how brands and consumers engage, it is imperative for marketing researchers and practitioners to reevaluate current thinking on the customer journey framework. Hamilton et al. (2021, hereinafter Hamilton et al.) offer a framework for understanding the current role of various social influences on that journey\u2014what they call the \u201csocial customer journey.\u201d Their work explores the potentially powerful impact of distal social others\u2014\u201dlarger groups or the whole of society, whose members may not be individuated, present, temporally proximal, or even known to the customer\u201d (Hamilton et al.)\u2014at each step in the journey and the role these distal influences, or \u201ctraveling companions,\u201d have on consumers\u2019 motivations, search, evaluation, decisions, and postdecision sharing activities. Marketers are currently grappling with one aspect of their model: the role of shared values in the social customer journey and the traveling companions, including brands, that leverage those shared values to influence decision making at each step of the journey. Hamilton et al. suggest the following questions for further research: How do consumers navigate conflicts between brand preferences and alignment with their broader social networks\u2019 values (e.g., political ideologies, social causes)? How do consumers manage situations in which proximal motivational inputs are in opposition to distal social norms? In simpler terms, how do consumers make choices when the act of choosing is an \u201cidentity signal\u201d (Hamilton et al.) that either aligns them with or puts them in opposition to the norms and values of their personal social networks? These questions are critical for practitioners, who are increasingly communicating their values via social channels, leading to both positive and negative outcomes including boycotts, buycotts, increases or decreases in reputation, changes to loyalty and consideration, and becoming a target of society\u2019s ever-growing \u201ccancel culture.\u201d This past summer\u2019s #StopHateForProfit boycott points to a critical question to explore about the role of brands in the social customer journey: What is the role of the business community in stopping \u201ctraveling companions\u201d from toxifying the social media environment with hate speech and negativity? While Hamilton et al. acknowledge the influence these distal social others have on a specific customer journey, they do not address the influence they have on the overall environment in which individuals are making decisions. \u201cTraveling companions\u201d who spread hate in social media environments may have an outsized influence on the social customer journey, driving consumers to curtail or end engagement on social media, thereby diminishing trust in the social media platforms themselves and the viability of social media platforms as powerful business tools all brands can rely on. This commentary extends Hamilton et al.\u2019s view of the social customer journey by exploring the business imperative of addressing the toxic social environments created by \u201ctraveling companions\u201d and a solution being developed by Pernod Ricard USA, in partnership with industry associations, to empower consumers, advertisers, and social media platforms to stop the spread of hate speech online.","paper_authors":["P. Many of these tools rely on statistical algorithms which need to be tuned to specific types of language. Recent studies have shown the absence of appropriate tuning, specifically in the presence of semantic shift, can hinder robustness of the underlying methods. However, little is known about the practical effect this sensitivity may have on downstream longitudinal analyses. We explore this gap in the literature through a timely case study: understanding shifts in depression during the course of the COVID-19 pandemic. We find that inclusion of only a small number of semantically-unstable features can promote significant changes in

"text", "parts": ["Sure, let's focus more on leadership while integrating the role of social media in enhancing leadership practices. We'll still highlight the aspects of social media relevant to leadership, but the primary focus will remain on leadership theories and practices. Here's the revised literature review for Chapter 3:\n\n### Chapter 3: Literature Review\n\n#### Introduction\nThe author's fianc\u00e9 often laments that nowadays, society's memory spans only about five years. He remarks that people often and easily forget what has come before, dooming all mistakes to be repeated. In contrast, within the sphere of academia, the topic of the effects and reach of social media, leadership, and authenticity has been studied and discussed at length.\n\n#### Synthesis of Existing Literature\n\nAuthentic Leadership Theory and Practice\n1. Gardner et al. In this world of uncertainty, where workers are demanding greater accountability and morality from their leadership, the need for authentic leadership is undeniable. Indeed, this demand people feel to be led by those purpose-driven individuals with strict moral compasses is evident. \nAlthough authentic leadership is still nascent in its philosophy (Northouse, 2019), many of the greatest minds in academia, commerce, and even science have written literature studying, hypothesizing, and postulating on its methodology, application, and efficacy. For example, Gardner et al. (2005), Berkovich (2010), and Qian et al. (2016) sought to examine the methodology and social mechanisms by which authentic leadership operated while Rego et al. (2013), Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014), Hsieh and Wang (2015), and Mehmood et al. (2016) tested its efficacy and application. Even outside of academia, experts have found the topic of authentic leadership compelling. For instance, both Blekkingh (2015) and Wulffers (2017) have written entire books dedicated to the question of how to find your purpose and achieve authenticity, while Kerfoot\u2019s (2006) application of authentic leadership theory in nursing is brilliant in its simplicity! \nThis paper will summarize, critique, and evaluate each of the literary works referenced in turn. Furthermore, each literary work will be critiqued on the basis of its academic robustness or usefulness to research concerning authentic leadership. Finally, this treatise will examine the credibility of the authors and their writing concerning the subject matter on the whole.\nLiterature Review\nAcademic Discourses on Leadership Theory and Methodology\nIn their article titled, \u201c\u2018Can you see the real me?\u2019 A self-based model of authentic leader and follower development,\u201d Gardner et al. (2005) contends that \u201cthe purpose of this article is to further develop and extend an emerging theory of authentic leadership development\u201d (p. 344). The authors begin by defining their interpretation of the constructs of authenticity, authentic leadership, and authentic followership. Gardner et al. (2005) then discuss a conceptual authentic leadership framework for leader and follower development. \n Gardner et al. (2005) propose what they describe as a \u201cself-based model of the developmental processes for authentic leadership and followership\u201d (p. 348). This model sets forth the idea that a leader\u2019s personal history is the catalyst for authentic leadership development (Gardner et al., 2005). In addition, the authors identify self-awareness and self-regulation as two fundamental components of authentic leadership development, and they discuss both these concepts in depth. Also at the heart of this article is the idea that authentic leaders are positive role models for followers and consistently model authentic behavior, balanced processing, self-awareness, and transparency.\n\tThis article is a valuable resource in examining authentic leadership theory because it examines authentic leadership development using a reflective perspective that looks at the roles of both the leader and follower. The authors also clearly and succinctly define the various components of their authentic leadership model. However, one area for critique is that the authors do not provide concrete examples of the outcomes they predict, making the article\u2019s subject matter entirely theoretical. \nAnother scholarly literary work concerning the exploration of authentic leadership theory and its methodology is an article by Berkovich titled \u201cBetween Person and Person: Dialogical Pedagogy in Authentic Leadership Development,\u201d first published in the Academy of Management Learning & Education journal in 2014. Within this article, Berkovich (2014) suggests that dialogical pedagogy can be used to develop authentic leadership. In addition, he examines, critiques, and summarizes common approaches and ideas held in the academic community regarding authentic leadership theory and development. \nBerkovich (2014) identifies and discusses the two central focuses, \u2018narrative identity processing\u2019 and \u2018dramaturgical enactment,\u2019 of the main didactic methods for authentic leadership development. He then suggests a new perspective based on dialogical philosophy and outlines a proposed framework for dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership. Berkovich (2010) identifies eight areas of dialogical pedagogy which he asserts are useful in authentic leadership development: care, contact, critical thinking, empathy, mutuality, open-mindedness, respect, and self-exposure. Finally, the article evaluates and critiques the use and outcomes of using dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership development initiatives.\n\tBerkovich\u2019s (2014) discourses were helpful in that the author first defined his view of the current perspectives in authentic leadership before exploring a new perspective. The article discusses the foundations and mechanics of dialogical pedagogy in-depth, which helps the reader understand the author\u2019s overall argument and ideas. \nIn contrast to the scholarly works by Gardner et al. (2005) and Berkovich (2014), the article titled \u201cThe Influencing Mechanisms of Authentic Leadership on Feedback-Seeking Behaviour: A Cognitive/Emotive Model,\u201d published in 2015 by Qian et al. functions almost as both a long-form hypothesis and authentic leadership methodology model. The article suggests that a critical influencing mechanism on feedback-seeking behavior in the leader-follower dyadic relationship is through followers\u2019 cognitive and emotive processes. \nThis composition describes how authentic leadership and employees\u2019 cognitive and emotive perspectives influence feedback-seeking behaviors. Qian et al. (2016) argue \u201cthat authentic leadership influences feedback-seeking indirectly through employees\u2019 perceptions about value and cost\u201d (p.4 82). They also put forth a model where authentic leadership correlates with positive employee emotions, thereby indirectly fostering feedback-seeking behavior (Qian et al., 2016).\n\tThe article provides a focused view of authentic leadership and how it correlates with feedback-seeking behaviors. The authors cite an extensive amount of credible sources and literature to support their claims, but this may cause a reader to get the sense that they are not putting forth any new ideas. One criticism of the composition is that some portions of the article seem almost redundant due to its focused view.\nStudies on the Application, Development, and Effects of Authentic Leadership\nIn contrast to the other articles mentioned about authentic leadership studies, this peer-reviewed journal article by Rego et al. (2013) focuses on group outcomes. The study examines how authentic leadership predicts team potency both directly and indirectly. Rego et al. (2013) suggest that authentic leadership alone \u201cis not sufficient to achieve positive team outcomes\u201d (p. 62). The authors assert that team affective commitment and team virtuousness may also link authentic leadership and team potency. Therefore, the study also explores the mediatory role of team affective commitment and virtuousness. The authors described the concepts of authentic leadership, which led to their hypotheses in detail and provided ample supplementary information on their study topic.\nThe study was conducted at a Portuguese university with 59 teams ranging from 4-21 members. The results were quantified using questionnaires and statistical data. As a result, Rogo et al. (2013) were able to conclude that \u201cthe findings suggest that AL [authentic leadership] predicts team potency via the mediating role of team virtuousness and team affective commitment\u201d (p. 75). As with many other studies referenced, the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions.\nAs previously stated, many of the studies which concern themselves with the effects of authentic leadership focus on individual follower outcomes. This study is rare in that it examines the effects of authentic leadership on group outcomes. This rarity makes it an exceptional resource for authentic leadership theory research. \nAnother noteworthy peer-reviewed article examining authentic leadership concerns a study conducted \u201cto identify whether principal trainees can develop authentic leadership through processing decisions that they or their peers made in TBSs [team based simulations] of ethical cases that they or their peers had experienced\u201d (Shapira-Lishchinsky, 2014, p. 987) in the educational field. The study found two main advantages of TBSs: TBSs create a supportive environment to learn from participant mistakes, and TBSs heightened educational leader awareness of their caring responsibilities. However, while Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014) concluded that TBSs provide a framework for ethical discussion, the author did not establish a strong correlation between authentic leadership development in educational leaders and TBSs.\n\tAlthough this study is peer-reviewed, its results were not

presented in the form of quantifiable data. Thus, while the article did include a detailed analysis of authentic leadership theory and its methodology, it is ultimately not the best resource for authentic leadership research. However, many of the examples presented pertained to ethical, moral dilemmas that could easily correlate with authentic leadership theory through conjecture and deduction.\nHsieh and Wang (2015) conducted another compelling study into the effects of authentic leadership in organizations. The study focused on the influence of authentic leadership on employee trust and engagement from a supervisor-employee perspective (Hsieh & Wang, 2015). The study tested four distinct hypotheses concerning employee and supervisor perceptions of authentic leadership and its mediatory relationship with employee trust and engagement (Hsieh & Wang, 2015). \nThe study sample took the responses of 77 supervisors and 345 employees from 36 of Taiwan\u2019s best-performing companies (Hsieh & Wang, 2015). Results of the study, along with the methodology and initial hypotheses, were published in a peer-reviewed journal article. Results were quantified using study participants\u2019 questionnaire responses and then converted to statistical data and applied to a hierarchical linear model. Using this data, the authors were able to conclude that \u201csupervisor-perceived authentic leadership has a fully mediating influence on employee work engagement through employee trust\u201d (Hsieh & Wang, 2015, p. 2341).\n\tThis study is a valuable resource for authentic leadership theory because of its prominent use of statistical data. In addition, Hsieh and Wang\u2019s (2015) presentation of quantifiable results gives greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions. Overall, the authors\u2019 research, hypotheses, test, and findings present a clear picture of the application of authentic leadership and its probable outcomes.\nIn contrast to the other authentic leadership studies done by Rego et al. (2013), Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014), and Hsieh and Wang (2015), which primarily focused on outcomes, Mehmood et al. (2016) research focus was on correlative relationships. Specifically, the study examined the role of authentic leadership in employees\u2019 developmental goals. In addition, the authors also sought to test the correlation between supervisors\u2019 authentic leadership and employee performance (Mehmood et al., 2016). \nThe authors put forth three distinct hypotheses which predicted that authentic leadership positively predicts followers\u2019 learning goal orientation and indirectly positively predicts followers\u2019 performance and engagement. The study sample of participants included 115 supervisors and 345 employees in the Pakistani Telecommunications sector (Mehmood et al., 2016). Similar to the study conducted by Rogo et al. (2013) and Hsieh and Wang (2015), results were quantified using a questionnaire and statistical data. Mehmood et al. (2016) concluded that there is \u201cevidence that authentic leadership predicts followers' in\u2010role performance and civic virtue extra\u2010role performance through followers' LGO\u201d (p. 882).\n\t As with most of the other studies referenced, the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions. However, one criticism of this source is that it does not discuss much of the research that the authors conducted in authentic leadership theory before they arrived at their hypothesis. Indeed, while the authors cite an extensive list of credible sources from which they formulated their ideas, it may have been helpful for them to discuss and perform a deeper analysis of those sources more before stating their hypotheses in the article.\nHow to Achieve Authenticity\nBlekkingh\u2019s (2015) book, titled Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission, explores the ideas present in authentic leadership theory with the intent to use them as a tool for discovering one\u2019s purpose. Blekkingh

(2015) approaches his topic through a seven-layer model, which he postulates is the framework of all human beings. In chapter discussion order, these seven layers are environment, behavior, skills, norms, ego, values, and authenticity.\nEach of the initial seven chapters focused on one of these layers and the problems associated with each layer. Blekkingh (2015) suggests that through this layered self-reflection, one can find their authentic self and purpose. He presents the idea that once an individual is aware of their authentic self and purpose, they will be able to \u201cput Authentic Leadership into effect\u201d (Blekkingh, 2015, p. x). Finally, he concludes the book with resources for further exploration and includes a lengthy appendix that functions as a kind of encyclopedia with supplemental materials.\n\tThe author is a credible source in authentic leadership theory due to his work as both an authentic leadership lecturer at a Dutch university and as one of the founders of a consultancy firm centered around the tenets of authentic leadership. However, one failing of the book as an authentic leadership resource is that many of the examples in the book are mainly anecdotal and lack academic or scientific robustness. In contrast, the author\u2019s simple language and engaging exercises make his ideas and pedagogy easily understood and applicable to anyone.\nIn contrast to Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) writing, Wulffers\u2019s (2017) book begins by commenting on the state of leadership today and also examining the consequences of poor leadership. The book, titled Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching Approach, is similar to Blekkingh\u2019s book in that it also focuses on achieving authenticity. The author cites authentic leadership theory as a key method for achieving a better quality of leadership. \nWullffers (2017) examines what authentic leadership is from a scholarly perspective and cites multiple literary works concerning the mechanisms of authentic leadership. She then examines the components and methodologies of authentic leadership development. First, the author states that \u201cauthentic leaders are leaders who know who they are and who are true to themselves\u201d (Wulffers, 2017, p. 7). Next, she describes leader authenticity as a spectrum with \u201cleadership development levels of maturity that shape the moral and cognitive capacities\u201d (p. 57) of leaders. The author then goes on to discuss how leaders may navigate up developmental levels. Finally, Wulffers (2017) examines well-known leaders through the lens of authentic leadership (p. 208).\n\t Wulffers (2017) heavily references previous literature on authentic leadership theory to support her assertions. While the author presents some new ideas, this book functions mainly as an extended case study and detailed manual on achieving authenticity. She also relies heavily on her own experiences to present concrete examples illustrating the book\u2019s concepts and ideas. Wullffers is also lent greater credibility through endorsements and testimonials by industry leaders. Finally, the book includes several appendices and end-notes which enhance its usefulness in authentic leadership theory research. \nPutting Authenticity to Work\nAuthentic leadership isn\u2019t just a philosophy or theory. It isn\u2019t just useful for experts and scholars. Even without being an appointed leader\u2014or reading or writing books on the subject\u2014ordinary people can use the tenets of authentic leadership to improve many aspects of their professional life. For example, Kerfoot (2006) wrote a compelling article detailing the practical applications of authentic leadership theory in the nursing profession.\nKerfoot\u2019s (2006) peer-reviewed journal article discusses authentic leadership development in the context of the nursing profession. Kerfoot (2006) presents the idea that leader authenticity cannot be self-defined; it lies only in followers\u2019 perceptions. The author also suggests that authenticity may be a character trait but then postulates that through mentoring and confidence, one can create the perception of authenticity as a leader (Kerfoot, 2006).\n\tThe composition clearly defines the author\u2019s idea of authentic leadership and its importance. Moreover, while the article states several arguable conjectures, they are supported by the cited references from other credible sources. Thus, this article is relevant and helpful to any authentic leadership research in that it gives context to\u2014and an application of\u2014authentic leadership theory in a specific profession. \nAlthough authentic leadership theory is still considered a developing philosophy, various treatises, studies, and books have been written examining its application, development, and efficacy. However, much is still unknown about the mechanisms by which authentic leadership functions, and even less is certain about how to achieve authenticity. Even so, one central theme is observed through the breath of all authentic leadership literature: authentic leaders are ethically moral bound and purpose-driven. \n\n\nReferences\nBERKOVICH, I. He remarks that people often and easily forget what has come before, dooming all mistakes to be repeated. In contrast, within the sphere of academia, the topic of the effects and reach of social media, leadership, and authenticity has been studied and discussed at length. In this chapter, we will explore the various facets of authentic leadership, its application, and its intersection with social media as a tool for leadership and change.\n\n#### Synthesis of Existing Literature\n\nAuthentic Leadership Theory and Practice\n\n1. Gardner et al. (2005): The self-based model of authentic leadership development highlights the importance of self-awareness and self-regulation in leadership. Authentic leaders are positive role models who consistently model authentic behavior, balanced processing, self-awareness, and transparency (Gardner et al., 2005).\n \n2. Berkovich (2014): Dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership emphasizes the significance of narrative identity and dramaturgical enactment. Berkovich discusses the foundations and mechanics of dialogical pedagogy in-depth, providing a new perspective based on dialogical philosophy (Berkovich, 2014).\n\nApplication and Efficacy of Authentic Leadership\n\n3. Qian et al. (2016): This study examines the cognitive and emotive processes influencing feedback-seeking behavior in leader-follower relationships. The authors propose that authentic leadership indirectly influences feedback-seeking behavior through perceptions of value and cost, and positive emotions (Qian et al., 2016).\n\n4. Rego et al. (2013): Authentic leadership\u2019s impact on team potency and the mediating role of team virtuousness and affective commitment are examined. The study concludes that authentic leadership predicts team potency via these mediating roles (Rego et al., 2013).\n\n5. Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014): This study explores the use of team-based simulations in developing authentic leadership among educational leaders. While providing a supportive environment for ethical discussions, the study did not establish a strong correlation between simulations and authentic leadership development (Shapira-Lishchinsky, 2014).\n\n6. Hsieh and Wang (2015): Investigating the influence of authentic leadership on employee trust and engagement, this study finds that supervisor-perceived authentic leadership fully mediates employee work engagement through employee trust (Hsieh & Wang, 2015).\n\n7. Mehmood et al. (2016): This study examines the role of authentic leadership in employees\u2019 developmental goals and performance. It concludes that authentic leadership predicts followers' in-role and extra-role performance through learning goal orientation (Mehmood et al., 2016).\n\nThe Intersection of Social Media and Leadership\n\n8. Odii (2020): Social media's potential to facilitate and impede change is significant, making it a powerful tool for change management initiatives. Authentic leaders can leverage social media to strengthen change management efforts (Odii, 2020).\n\n9. Harkins & Athineos (2023): The role of emotionally charged content on social media in engaging followers and promoting social causes is explored. Positive, emotionally charged images are more effective in garnering social media activity (Harkins & Athineos, 2023).\n\n10. Khaund et al. (2022): The influence of social bots and their coordination during online campaigns underscores the need for ethical leadership in navigating digital landscapes. Bots can significantly impact social media conversations and public opinion (Khaund et al., 2022).\n\n11. Naeem (2020): The role of social networking applications in facilitating organizational change by enhancing knowledge sharing and participation is examined. Social media enhances the richness and reach of communication among stakeholders (Naeem, 2020).\n\n12. Omolloh (2020): This case study explores the use of social media as a management tool in small businesses, highlighting its benefits in customer engagement and business awareness (Omolloh, 2020).\n\nBooks on Achieving Authenticity\n\n13. Blekkingh (2015): The book "Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission" explores a seven-layer model for discovering one's purpose and achieving authenticity. Blekkingh emphasizes self-reflection to find one\u2019s authentic self and purpose (Blekkingh, 2015).\n\n14. Wulffers (2017): In "Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A

Coaching Approach," Wulffers examines the components and methodologies of authentic leadership development. The book serves as an extended case study and detailed manual on achieving authenticity (Wulffers, 2017).\n\nPractical Applications of Authentic Leadership\n\n15. Kerfoot (2006): This article discusses the application of authentic leadership theory in the nursing profession. Kerfoot argues that leader authenticity lies in followers\u2019 perceptions and can be developed through mentoring and confidence (Kerfoot, 2006).\n\n#### Conclusion\n\nThe synthesis of existing literature and new sources illustrates that authentic leadership and the strategic use of social media are crucial for fostering effective leadership and societal change. Authentic leaders must leverage social media's potential while mitigating its risks to achieve positive outcomes in their organizations.\n\n#### References\n- Berkovich, I. (2014). He remarks that people often and easily forget what has come before, dooming all mistakes to be repeated. In contrast, within the sphere of academia, the topic of the effects and reach of social media, leadership, and authenticity has been studied and discussed at length. In this chapter, we will explore the various facets of authentic leadership, its application, and its intersection with social media as a tool for leadership and change.\n\n#### Synthesis of Existing Literature\n\nIn a world rife with uncertainty, where workers are demanding greater accountability and morality from their leadership, the need for authentic leadership is undeniable. As Northouse (2019) articulates, people are longing for bona fide leadership they can trust, leaders who are honest and good. Although authentic leadership is still nascent in its philosophy, many of the greatest

minds in academia, commerce, and even science have studied, hypothesized, and postulated on its methodology, application, and efficacy.\n\nGardner et al. (2005) provided a foundational understanding of authentic leadership by proposing a self-based model of the developmental processes for authentic leadership and followership. They emphasize the importance of self-awareness and self-regulation, suggesting that these are fundamental components of authentic leadership development. According to their model, a leader\u2019s personal history is the catalyst for authentic leadership development. This reflective perspective looks at the roles of both leader and follower, highlighting how authentic leaders are positive role models who consistently exhibit balanced processing, self-awareness, and transparency. This comprehensive framework is invaluable in examining authentic leadership theory, despite the lack of concrete examples making the subject matter somewhat theoretical.\n\nBerkovich (2014) extends this understanding by incorporating dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership development. He critiques common approaches and suggests a new perspective based on dialogical philosophy, outlining a framework for dialogical pedagogy. By identifying and discussing narrative identity processing and dramaturgical enactment, Berkovich provides a thorough examination of the foundations and mechanics of dialogical pedagogy, helping readers grasp the overall purpose and ideas set forth in the article. His discourse on empathy, mutuality, and open-mindedness underscores the intricate nature of authentic leadership development.\n\nQian et al. (2016) delve into the cognitive and emotive mechanisms influencing feedback-seeking behavior within leader-follower relationships. They argue that authentic leadership influences feedback-seeking indirectly through employees\u2019 perceptions about value and cost, and their positive emotions. This focused view on feedback-seeking behaviors provides a deeper understanding of how authentic leadership operates on a cognitive and emotional level. While the article is heavily theoretical, it is supported by an extensive amount of credible sources and literature, reinforcing its claims.\n\nRego et al. (2013) shift the focus to group outcomes, examining how authentic leadership predicts team potency both directly and indirectly through the mediating role of team virtuousness and affective commitment. Their study, conducted at a Portuguese university with 59 teams, provides quantifiable results that suggest authentic leadership is associated with more virtuous, committed, and potent teams. This research is particularly valuable as it examines the effects of authentic leadership on group outcomes, a rarity among studies that often focus on individual follower outcomes.\n\nIn a similar vein, Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014) explores the development of authentic leadership through team-based simulations (TBSs) of ethical cases in the educational field. While TBSs were found to create a supportive environment for learning from mistakes and heightening leader awareness of their caring responsibilities, the study did not establish a strong correlation between TBSs and authentic leadership development. Despite this limitation, the detailed analysis of authentic leadership theory and methodology presented in the study offers valuable insights.\n\nHsieh and Wang (2015) provide compelling evidence on the influence of authentic leadership on employee trust and engagement from a supervisor-employee perspective. Their study, which tested four hypotheses concerning employee and supervisor perceptions of authentic leadership, found that supervisor-perceived authentic leadership has a fully mediating influence on employee work engagement through employee trust. The use of statistical data to present quantifiable results lends greater credibility to their conclusions, offering a clear picture of the application of authentic leadership and its probable outcomes.\n\nMehmood et al. (2016) focus on the role of authentic leadership in employees\u2019 developmental goals and performance. Their study, conducted with supervisors and employees in the Pakistani Telecommunications sector, concludes that authentic leadership predicts followers' in-role and extra-role performance through learning goal orientation. As with other studies, the presentation of quantifiable results lends credibility to the authors' conclusions, although a deeper analysis of the research leading to their hypotheses would have been beneficial.\n\nThe exploration of authentic leadership is not confined to academia. Blekkingh (2015) and Wulffers (2017) offer practical guides to achieving authenticity. Blekkingh\u2019s book, "Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission," explores a seven-layer model for discovering one's purpose and achieving authenticity. He suggests that through layered self-reflection, individuals can find their authentic self and purpose, and subsequently put authentic leadership into effect. Although the book is mainly anecdotal and lacks academic robustness, its simple language and engaging exercises make it accessible and applicable to a broad audience.\n\nWulffers (2017), in "Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching Approach," examines the state of leadership today and the consequences of poor leadership. She presents authentic leadership theory as a key method for achieving better quality leadership. Wulffers\u2019 book serves as an extended case study and detailed manual on achieving authenticity, heavily referencing previous literature on authentic leadership theory. Her practical approach and endorsements by industry leaders enhance the book's usefulness in authentic leadership theory research.\n\nKerfoot (2006) provides a practical application of authentic leadership theory in the nursing profession. She argues that leader authenticity cannot be self-defined but lies in followers\u2019 perceptions. Through mentoring and confidence, one can create the perception of authenticity as a leader. This practical perspective is relevant and helpful to authentic leadership research, offering context and application in a specific profession.\n\nThe role of social media in enhancing authentic leadership and fostering societal change is also significant. Odii (2020) discusses social media's potential to facilitate and impede change, highlighting its use in change management initiatives. Authentic leaders can leverage social media to strengthen change management efforts, while also navigating the ethical challenges it presents.\n\nHarkins & Athineos (2023) explore the impact of emotionally charged content on social media in engaging followers and promoting social causes. Their findings suggest that positive, emotionally charged images are more effective in garnering social media activity, underscoring the power of social media in leadership and change.\n\nKhaund et al. (2022) highlight the influence of social bots and their coordination during online campaigns, emphasizing the need for ethical leadership in navigating digital landscapes. Bots can significantly impact social media conversations and public opinion, presenting both opportunities and challenges for authentic leaders.\n\nNaeem (2020) examines the role of social networking applications in facilitating organizational change by enhancing knowledge sharing and participation. Social media enhances the richness and reach of communication among stakeholders, providing a powerful tool for leaders to drive change.\n\nOmolloh (2020) presents a case study on the use of social media as a management tool in small businesses, highlighting its benefits in customer engagement and business awareness. This practical example underscores the versatility of social media in enhancing leadership practices across different contexts.\n\nIn conclusion, the synthesis of existing literature and new sources illustrates that authentic leadership and the strategic use of social media are crucial for fostering effective leadership and societal change. Authentic leaders must leverage social media's potential while mitigating its risks to achieve positive outcomes in their organizations. Future research should continue to explore the long-term effects of these dynamics on societal values and norms.\n\n#### References\n- Berkovich, I. (2014). In this chapter, we will explore the various facets of authentic leadership, its application, and its intersection with social media as a tool for leadership and change.\n\n#### Understanding Authentic Leadership\n\nIn a world rife with uncertainty, where workers are demanding greater accountability and morality from their leadership, the need for authentic leadership is undeniable. As Northouse (2019) articulates, people are longing for bona fide leadership they can trust, leaders who are honest and good.

Although authentic leadership is still nascent in its philosophy, many of the greatest minds in academia, commerce, and even science have studied, hypothesized, and postulated on its methodology, application, and efficacy.\n\nGardner et al. (2005) provided a foundational understanding of authentic leadership by proposing a self-based model of the developmental processes for authentic leadership and followership. They emphasize the importance of self-awareness and self-regulation, suggesting that these are fundamental components of authentic leadership development. According to their model, a leader\u2019s personal history is the catalyst for authentic leadership development. This reflective perspective looks at the roles of both leader and follower, highlighting how authentic leaders are positive role models who consistently exhibit balanced processing, self-awareness, and transparency. Despite the lack of concrete examples, their comprehensive framework remains invaluable in examining authentic leadership theory.\n\nBerkovich (2014) extends this understanding by incorporating dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership development. He critiques common approaches and suggests a new perspective based on dialogical philosophy, outlining a framework for dialogical pedagogy. By identifying and discussing narrative identity processing and dramaturgical enactment, Berkovich provides a thorough examination of the foundations and mechanics of dialogical pedagogy. His discourse on empathy, mutuality, and open-mindedness underscores the intricate nature of authentic leadership development, making his contribution a significant expansion on Gardner et al.'s initial framework.\n#### Application and Efficacy of Authentic Leadership\n\nThe practical application and efficacy of authentic leadership have been the focus of several studies. Qian et al. (2016) delve into the cognitive and emotive mechanisms influencing feedback-seeking behavior within leader-follower relationships. They argue that authentic leadership influences feedback-seeking indirectly through employees\u2019 perceptions about value and cost, and their positive emotions. This focused view on feedback-seeking behaviors provides a deeper understanding of how authentic leadership operates on a cognitive and emotional level. Although heavily theoretical, their study is supported by credible sources, reinforcing its claims.\n\nShifting the focus to group outcomes, Rego et al. (2013) examine how authentic leadership predicts team potency both directly and indirectly through the mediating role of team virtuousness and affective commitment. Their study, conducted at a Portuguese university with 59 teams, provides quantifiable results that suggest authentic leadership is associated with more virtuous, committed, and potent teams. This research is particularly valuable as it examines the effects of authentic leadership on group outcomes, a rarity among studies that often focus on individual follower outcomes. The study's findings are crucial for understanding the broader impacts of authentic leadership within teams and organizations.\n\nShapira-Lishchinsky (2014) explores the development of authentic leadership through team-based simulations (TBSs) of ethical cases in the educational field. While TBSs were found to create a supportive environment for learning from mistakes and heightening leader awareness of their caring responsibilities, the study did not establish a strong correlation between simulations and authentic leadership development. Despite this limitation, the detailed analysis of authentic leadership theory and methodology presented in the study offers valuable insights. These insights, while specific to educational leaders, have broader implications for the development of authentic leadership in various contexts.\n\nHsieh and Wang (2015) provide compelling evidence on the influence of authentic leadership on employee trust and engagement from a supervisor-employee perspective. Their study, which tested four hypotheses concerning employee and supervisor perceptions of authentic leadership, found that supervisor-perceived authentic leadership has a fully mediating influence on employee work engagement through employee trust. The use of statistical data to present quantifiable results lends greater credibility to their conclusions, offering a clear picture of the application of authentic leadership and its probable outcomes. This reinforces the importance of trust in the authentic leadership dynamic.\n\nIn contrast to other studies that primarily focused on outcomes, Mehmood et al. (2016) examine the role of authentic leadership in employees\u2019 developmental goals and performance. Their study, conducted with supervisors and employees in the Pakistani Telecommunications sector, concludes that authentic leadership predicts followers' in-role and extra-role performance through learning goal orientation. As with other studies, the presentation of quantifiable results lends credibility to the authors' conclusions, although a deeper analysis of the research leading to their hypotheses would have been beneficial. This study emphasizes the developmental aspect of authentic leadership and its impact on employee performance.\n\n#### Authentic Leadership in Practice\n\nThe exploration of authentic leadership is not confined to academia. Blekkingh (2015) and Wulffers (2017) offer practical guides to achieving authenticity. Blekkingh\u2019s book, "Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission," explores a seven-layer model for discovering one's purpose and achieving authenticity. He suggests that through layered self-reflection, individuals can find their authentic self and purpose, and subsequently put authentic leadership into effect. Although the book is mainly anecdotal and lacks academic robustness, its simple language and engaging exercises make it accessible and applicable to a broad audience. This practical approach to authentic leadership complements the theoretical frameworks discussed earlier.\n\nWulffers (2017), in "Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching Approach," examines the state of leadership today and the consequences of poor leadership. She presents authentic leadership theory as a key method for achieving better quality leadership. Wulffers\u2019 book serves as an extended case study and detailed manual on achieving authenticity, heavily referencing previous literature on authentic leadership theory. Her practical approach and endorsements by industry leaders enhance the book's usefulness in authentic leadership theory research. This combination of practical advice and theoretical grounding makes it a valuable resource.\n\nKerfoot (2006) provides a practical application of authentic leadership theory in the nursing profession. She argues that leader authenticity cannot be self-defined but lies in followers\u2019 perceptions. Through mentoring and confidence, one can create the perception of authenticity as a leader. This practical perspective is relevant and helpful to authentic leadership research, offering context and application in a specific profession. Kerfoot\u2019s insights bridge the gap between theory and practice, demonstrating the applicability of authentic leadership in professional settings.\n\n#### The Role of Social Media in Enhancing Authentic Leadership\n\nThe role of social media in enhancing authentic leadership and fostering societal change is also significant. Odii (2020) discusses social media's potential to facilitate and impede change, highlighting its use in change management initiatives. Authentic leaders can leverage social media to strengthen change management efforts while also navigating the ethical challenges it presents. This dual role of social media underscores its importance in contemporary leadership.\n\nHarkins & Athineos (2023) explore the impact of emotionally charged content on social media in engaging followers and promoting social causes. Their findings suggest that positive, emotionally charged images are more effective in garnering social media activity, underscoring the power of social media in leadership and change. This aligns with the principles of authentic leadership, where emotional intelligence and engagement are crucial.\n\nKhaund et al. (2022) highlight the influence of social bots and their coordination during online campaigns, emphasizing the need for ethical leadership in navigating digital landscapes. Bots can significantly impact social media conversations and public opinion, presenting both opportunities and challenges for authentic leaders. The ethical considerations in using social media are critical for maintaining authenticity.\n\nNaeem (2020) examines the role of social networking applications in facilitating organizational change by enhancing knowledge sharing and participation. Social media enhances the richness and reach of communication among stakeholders, providing a powerful tool for leaders to drive change. This practical application of social media complements the theoretical frameworks of authentic leadership.\n\nOmolloh (2020) presents a case study on the use of social media as a management tool in small businesses, highlighting its benefits in customer engagement and business awareness. This practical example underscores the versatility of social media in enhancing leadership practices across different contexts. The integration of social media in leadership strategies can amplify the impact of authentic leadership.\n\n#### Conclusion\n\nThe synthesis of existing literature and new sources illustrates that authentic leadership and the strategic use of social media are crucial for fostering effective leadership and societal change. Authentic leaders must leverage social media's potential while mitigating its risks to achieve positive outcomes in their organizations. Future research should continue to explore the long-term effects of these dynamics on societal values and norms.\n\n#### References\n- Berkovich, I. (2014). He does not trust easily and always looks beyond what people say to determine their meaning. Consequently he is very hard to manipulate and very hard to influence and as such he is very hard to lead; he prefers to be in charge. Therefore he is skilled in convincing people. He knows how to influence others and lead people because as Northouse (2019) asserts leadership is an influence process.\nUnlike the author\u2019s fianc\u00e9 a significant portion of the population does not delve deeply into the authenticity of the information they receive; 18% of Americans report that social media has a significant impact on their voting decisions and 55% consider it their primary news source according to a 2019 Pew Research study. This widespread influence of social media raises a compelling question about the nature of leadership in the digital era. Building on Northouse's definition I intend to argue that the influence exerted by social media can be seen as a form of authentic leadership. This form of leadership practiced by social media influencers aligns closely with authentic leadership theory emphasizing transparency ethics and a focus on the communal good. Through their pervasive reach and often personal engagement with followers these influencers craft a modern leadership narrative that significantly shapes public opinions and societal values.\nThe influence of social media is profound and ubiquitous reaching across all sectors of society. According to the Pew Research Center approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some type of social media with varying impacts on social political and community engagement (Pew Research Center 2021). The breadth of this influence spans across diverse demographic groups making nearly everyone a potential recipient of communicated messages whether accurate or misleading.\nThe potential benefits of this influence include increased awareness and mobilization for social causes as seen with movements like #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter which have propelled significant societal shifts and brought critical issues to the forefront of global awareness. Social media influencers have played crucial roles in these movements utilizing their platforms to amplify voices and call for action. For instance prominent figures like Alyssa Milano and Tarana Burke have used their influence to promote the #MeToo movement leading to widespread discussions about sexual harassment and assault (Mendes et al. 2018).\nHowever the risks involve the spread of misinformation and manipulating public opinion which can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The cost of such influence can be seen in the widespread controversies surrounding elections and public policy debates where influencers have swayed public sentiment through both genuine and questionable means. For example during the 2016 U.S. presidential election false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots was found to have significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors (Allcott & Gentzkow 2017).\nThe individuals most impacted by this phenomenon include young adults who are the most active on platforms like Instagram and TikTok and are particularly susceptible to influencer marketing and political campaigns (Auxier & Anderson 2021). This demographic's high engagement levels highlight the critical need to understand the mechanisms of influence and leadership within these digital platforms. Research indicates that young people trust influencers more than traditional celebrities or politicians making them a key target for marketing and political messaging (Djafarova & Rushworth 2017).\nIn addition to social movements and political implications the economic impact of social media influence is significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry with brands leveraging the reach and authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence the influencer marketing industry is set to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence 2021). This economic dimension underscores the dual nature of influencer power: while it offers opportunities for authentic brand engagement it also raises questions about ethics and transparency in advertising.\nThe social significance of social media influence is further highlighted by its role in mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image particularly among young women. For example Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies. These findings suggest that while influencers can promote positive messages they also have the potential to contribute to harmful social norms.\nThis research project is situated at the intersection of leadership theory and digital media studies. It aims to critically analyze the role of social media influencers as contemporary leaders who not only entertain but also significantly influence societal values and norms. By aligning the characteristics of social media leadership with authentic leadership theories this study will evaluate the authenticity and ethical considerations of influencers' practices. The findings are expected to provide insights into how digital platforms can be harnessed for responsible and effective leadership promoting positive change while mitigating risks associated with digital influence. This foundational exploration sets the stage for a detailed literature review in Chapter 2 where theories of leadership and empirical studies on digital influence will be synthesized to build a comprehensive framework for understanding leadership in the digital age.\nReferences\nAllcott H. & Gentzkow M. In addition it served as a platform for ordinary people to share their views and reactions during a time of uncertainty and unrest. Most notably TikTok the social media platform where users post short videos lip-singing and dancing rose to prominence.\nHowever throughout this time TikTok and other social media platforms became more than just a means for people to connect and express themselves. It also became the focal point and catalyst to demonstrations across the nation. During this period incendiary and inspirational hashtags such as \u2018#stopthesteal\u2019 and \u2018#sayhername\u2019 took center stage and entered the public vernacular. \nSocial media activism\u2014long looked down upon as lazy and ineffectual\u2014 suddenly became the vehicle activists used to recruit and organize. For example it\u2019s noted that many of the participants of the January 6th 2021 capital insurrection first tweeted or posted videos on Youtube promoting the January 6 demonstration that devolved into a riot (Atlantic Council\u2019s DFRLab 2021). At the time many political pundits argued that the January 6th insurrection occurred because of incendiary statements made both online and in-person by then President Donald Trump (Heilweil & Ghaffary 2021; \u201cTrump Impeached\u201d 2021). Later former President Trump would even be prosecuted impeached and banned from social media platforms for inciting the January 6th riot.\nIt\u2019s clear that social media influences and other online public figures hold tremendous sway over public opinion and attitudes in current times. Today one need never leave home to influence the attitude and practices of the public at large. Thus it begs the question \u2018Has social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 gotten a bad rap?\u2019 Is it possible to start a movement and effect positive change with a couple of keystrokes and a vision?\nI believe the answer to those questions is yes. If I could gather foremost experts on topics relevant to the subject together to discuss it at a cocktail party I feel confident they also would reach the same conclusion. Indeed suppose one were to examine the scope of their research. In that case one might find support for my assertion and further evidence of how social media influence or thought leadership influences and motivates the actions of the public at large.\nFor example my first guest would certainly be Peter Guy Northouse. Northouse\u2019s textbooks on leadership explore various leadership theories and provide several case studies for each application. In his research and writing Northouse (2019) displays a thorough understanding of the mechanics of how different kinds of leaders influence followers thinking and behavior (Northouse 2019 2021). If one wanted to elucidate and compare how the qualities exhibited by social media activists resembled and matched those of other prominent leaders and activists in history Northouse\u2019s research would be the best starting point. One need only delve into the research of Northouse to discover the primary qualities traits and approaches utilized by leaders.\nFor instance Northouse\u2019s 2019 book titled Leadership: theory and practice begins by discussing the dissonance between scholars about the meaning of leadership. Northouse (2019) also explores the history of leadership theory in the modern age. Northouse (2019) then defines leadership as \u201ca process whereby an individual influences a group of individuals to achieve a common goal\u201d (p. 43).\nOf the varied leadership descriptions available Northouse\u2019s definition of leadership aligns most with my thinking philosophy and research. Through all his case studies and descriptions of modern leadership theories and approaches he reveals how one needs only to have influence and lead followers toward a common goal to be a leader. As one may be influenced through many avenues over-simplifying leadership into an influence process allows many people who occupy non-traditional or new societal roles of influence to be considered leaders.\nHowever Northouse (2019) also asserts that \u201cit is the leader who often initiates the relationship creates the communication linkages and carries the burden for maintaining the relationship\u201d (p. 44). This assertion leads me to the second guest of my cocktail party. In order to discuss the mechanisms by which one could gain followers and initiate a meaningful and influential relationship with persons merely through how they present themselves and their ideas it seems that I would need a scholar knowledgeable about authentic leadership theory and practices. Thus my next guest would be author and university lecturer Bas W. Blekkingh.\nIn a book titled Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission Blekkingh (2015) presents a seven-layer model for achieving authenticity. More importantly Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) seven-layer model illustrates how authentic leaders can solve problems and influence others by identifying their own purpose. Moreover Blekkingh (2015) asserts that \u201cAuthentic Leadership amounts to \u2018exerting influence with your mission in mind in a genuine and reliable way\u2019\u201d (p. 149). Blekkingh\u2019s assertions and the subject of his book overall provide an answer to how social media influences may serve as authentic leaders in society and guide others toward a particular philosophy or way of thinking.\nHowever next I would want guests at my cocktail party whose research presented further data to support my claim. This guest\u2019s research would contain prior studies or statistical data collected that reflected the literary body of work of which my research would be an addition. Consequently the next guest invited to my hypothetical cocktail party would be an Instructor at Grant MacEwan College and the University of Alberta Shelly Boulianne.\nBoulianne\u2019s (2009) research titled \u201cDoes Internet Use Affect Engagement? A MetaAnalysis of Research\u201d initially published in the Political Communication journal meets these criteria perfectly. Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis of 38 studies examining the correlation between internet use and political engagement provides concrete evidence of the role of the internet in political engagement. Boulianne (2009) asserted there was \u201crelatively little research on the relationship between Internet use and political engagement\u201d at publication (p. 295). However Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis bridged a gap in the literature and was able to show on an aggregate level the positive effect of internet use on civic engagement. Boulianne (2009) concluded that:\nIn this analysis of 38 studies and 166 effects testing the relationship between Internet use and political engagement the meta-data establish that there is little evidence to support the argument that Internet use is contributing to civic decline. The findings suggest that the effect of Internet use on engagement is positive. (p. 205)\nBoulianne\u2019s (2009) data and research serve as an essential link proving the potential for social media activism to affect public opinion and behavior. \n\tFinally the last guest I would invite to round out the discussion of whether social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 can result in positive social change is Henrik S. Christensen. As a scholar published author and doctoral candidate at the Department of Political Science at \u00c5bo Akademi University in Turku Finland Christensen\u2019s (2011) article offers a valued perspective on slactivism. In addition the author\u2019s research is relevant to my topic and represents part of the body of literature I would hope one day includes my research. \n\tIn a 2011 article titled \u201cPolitical activities on the Internet: Slacktivism or political participation by other means?\u201d initially published in the online academic journal First Monday Christensen (2011) discusses the societal implications of online activism and political engagement. Christensen (2011) cites and summarizes prior research devoted to the topic to reach a conclusion and answer the problem statement expressed in his introduction. In the article Christensen (2011) concludes that \u201ceven if it is not possible to dismiss the skepticism about the effectiveness of online participation it is premature to dismiss the impact of the Internet on political activism altogether\u201d (para. 60).\n\t Christensen\u2019s article explored prior research studies and presented data that either supported or challenged his idea. Christensen\u2019s article also reflected on and analyzed the arguments presented by other scholars to explain current societal behaviors. Thus in addition to Christensen\u2019s (2011) article being significantly relevant to my research topic it also represents an example of the kind of research product I wish my capstone project to be.\nMoreover each of my chosen cocktail party guest\u2019s work reflects on or further develops a particular aspect of the mechanics and significance of social media activism. Therefore I will likely refer to and cite their work in my capstone project. At the completion of my capstone project I hope that through exploring the research of others and extracting data about public opinion I will have proved the significance of online activism. In addition there is a gap in the literature that describes the role of authentic leadership in social media influence. Therefore my capstone project would prove and explain how one can affect positive change by living authentically and sharing your ideas or concerns online. \nIn modern society a tweet isn\u2019t just a tweet. In today\u2019s world interspersed between fun dancing and lip-syncing videos real issues affecting the community at large are being addressed. On TikTok people raise concerns comment on social issues and invite humanity to change for the better. The pandemic and other recent events have spotlighted how online activism can affect and direct offline public action. Going forward it is virtually indisputable that social media personalities and influencers have a tremendous platform that they can use to shape public perception of events and start a movement. By raising awareness of the significance of online influence I hope that people will take online platforms seriously and be cautious not to promote ideas and actions detrimental to society.\nReferences\nAtlantic Council\u2019s DFRLab. While Milano was not the originator of the phrase coined by activist Tarana Burke in 2006 Milano\u2019s tweet to her then three million-plus subscribers garnered thousands of responses overnight (Thomson 2018). Suddenly women who had suffered in silence\u2014sometimes even for years\u2014suddenly began to speak out about their experiences. Other victims bolstered and emboldened by what was becoming a culture of accountability for sexual harassment and assault perpetrators began to seize personal agency and confront their tormentors through official channels. \nThus what began as a mere tweet became a model for social media activism in the current age. Although the pandemic has affected society\u2019s primary modes of communication in past times social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 was looked down upon as lazy and ineffectual (Thomson 2018). However recent events such as the #MeToo movement might prompt one to reexamine long-held opinions on the topic. As more and more significant events driven by online activities occur one might question: Has slacktivism gotten a bad rap? Do we underestimate the leadership power of online influencers? Is social media influence an example of authentic leadership?\nAside from the #MeToo movement social media has been the purview and catalytic agent in many other social and political activities. For example many see organizer Alicia Garza\u2019s 2013 Facebook post containing the phrase \u2018black lives matter\u2019 as well as her friend and fellow organizer Patrisse Cullors\u2019 subsequently sharing that post with the hashtag #BlackLivesMatter as a pivotal moment in the modern civil rights movement era (Guynn 2015). Moreover even before the #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter movements Facebook was largely credited as a critical element in the 2011 Egyptian revolution (Vargas 2012).\nAdditionally corporations and other organizations have long acknowledged the impact of social media influencers and other online personalities on the general populace. Consequently many businesses and non-profit organizations partner with social-media influences to market their products or causes utilizing the power notoriety or fame of these social media figures (Anderson 2020). However although it is acknowledged that social media personalities have a tremendous platform that lends them a large audience to influence and share ideas with there is little research about the leadership function they fill in society. \nAccording to a 2021 Pew Research Center survey approximately seven in ten Americans use social media (Auxier & Anderson 2021). In addition 81% of survey participants report using the social media platform Youtube and 69% say they use Facebook (Pew Research Center 2021). While the data indicates that Americans utilize and engage with Social Media platforms it is still unclear to what degree social media influencers lead and affect the attitudes of the general populace. With the growing popularity and impact of social media use it\u2019s vital to gain a deeper perspective on the depth of influence social media platforms have to harness that power for good.\nA phenomenological study into the leadership role of social media influencers in modern society could illuminate the extent to which they guide societal attitudes and opinions. According to Tracy (2019) \u201cPhenomenology is the reflective study of pre\u2010reflective experience concerned with how people consciously experience specific phenomena things or stuff. Similar to grounded theory phenomenology does not specify or closely delineate what it expects to find in the study (p. 65). Accordingly this research will explore the relationship between online influence and authentic leadership utilizing an emic methodology where \u201cbehavior is described from the actor\u2019s point of view and is context\u2010specific\u201d (p. 26). However the primary purpose or goal of the phenomenological study will be to examine the significance and impact of social media personalities as authentic and thought leaders across various social media user age groups.\nAccording to Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) an emergent research design infers that the initial plan is fluid and that \u201csome or all phases of the process may change or shift after the researcher enters the field and begins to collect data\u2026the questions may change the forms of data collection may shift and the individuals studied may be modified (p. 259). Likewise the methodologies used during the research project may change. Moreover Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) advise that \u2018the idea behind qualitative research is to purposefully select participants or sites (or documents or visual material) that will best help the researcher understand the problem and the research question\u201d (p. 262). Hence I plan to gather data through three sources or data gathering methodologies.\nFirst I plan to curate a group of approximately four interview subjects. The subjects will represent four age ranges the Pew research survey data focuses on to correlate my findings better. I will also interview at least one social media personality with a significant following of 100000 users or more. In addition I will prepare a release form and gain the consent of all participants to use their personal details or for their varying levels of participation i.e. video audio recordings political affiliations etc. \nNext I will use the data from several annual Pew Research Center surveys on the social media platform use of adults in America. While I had considered preparing my own survey the data I wish to examine already exists and such an action would not be an efficient use of my time and efforts. In addition there are also several Gallup polls whose raw data I plan to use in research pursuits.\nAccording to Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) one category of qualitative data consists of \u201cqualitative audiovisual and digital materials (including social media materials). This data may take the form of photographs art objects videotapes website main pages e-mails text messages social media text or any forms of sound\u201d (p. 267). Thus I will also explore social-media platforms such as TikTok Youtube Reddit etc. to observe and examine whether social-media influencers actively engage in the behaviors that model or align with authentic leadership theory principles. My observations will likely inform the interview questions I prepare for study participants. \nMoreover Tracy (2019) asserts that fieldwork or participant witnessing \u201callows researchers to examine participants\u2019 actions as a means to understanding their values\u201d (p. 78). Exploring audio-visual and written materials on social media platforms like Twitter TikTok and Facebook are most akin to \u2018fieldwork\u2019 in the context of this project. Thus the observations or \u2018participant witnessing\u2019 that I engage in will help me discern the values and in turn the participants\u2019 authenticity and leadership or followership qualities.\nTo paint a clear picture of the relationship between social media influence and authentic leadership I would first review the written works of several writers and scholars in the field of authentic leadership. For example Peter G. Northouse is a Western Michigan University professor and writer of several books on leadership (Northouse 2019). Northouse\u2019s (2019) book titled Leadership: theory and practice begins by defining leadership. Northouse (2019) asserts that \u201cLeadership is a process whereby an individual influences a group of individuals to achieve a common goal\u201d (p. 43). Northouse (2019) then explores the history of leadership theory from the early 20th century onward. Each chapter onward then discusses a particular leadership theory or approach. \nIn chapter 9 Northouse (2019) gives an in-depth description of authentic leadership. He begins by claiming that:\nAuthentic leadership represents one of the newer areas of leadership research. It focuses on whether leadership is genuine and \u201creal.\u201d As the title of this approach implies authentic leadership is about the authenticity of leaders and their leadership\u2026 authentic leadership is still in the formative phase of development. As a result authentic leadership needs to be considered more tentatively: It is likely to change as new research about the theory is published (p. 308).\nNorthouse (2019) also describes the origins of authentic leadership and offers a rationale for its emerging popularity. However as asserted by Northouse authentic leadership theory is in its nascent stages so its application is not as readily recognizable. Even so Northouse (2019) clarifies and defines authentic leadership and its approaches within the chapter. Additionally Northouse also acknowledges the need for further research into authentic leadership theory. Therefore Northouse\u2019s general framework will be a helpful resource while studying the relationship between social media influence and authentic leadership.\nBlekkingh\u2019s (2015) and Wulffers\u2019 (2017) writing also provide insight into authentic leadership practices. For instance Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) book Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission explores authentic leadership practices while providing a guiding framework towards discovering one\u2019s purpose and achieving authenticity. In comparison while also equally relevant Wulffers\u2019 (2017) book titled Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching Approach provided critical insight into the mechanisms of authentic leadership while contending that authenticity is a spectrum. Wulffers\u2019 (2017) book is particularly pertinent as the writer examines the methodologies and components of authentic leadership development while also showing ample examples of authentic leaders in the public sphere.\nAfter using prior literature to shape the narrative and define my concept of authentic leadership I would also like to review the work of other scholars examining the effects of the internet and social media use in the modern age. For example Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis of prior studies done examining the relationship between internet use and political engagement is an ideal starting point to chart the trajectory of the effects of society\u2019s burgeoning social media use. In addition Boulianne (2009) concluded that \u201cthe meta-data establish that there is little evidence to support the argument that Internet use is contributing to civic decline. The findings suggest that the effect of Internet use on engagement is positive\u201d (p. 205). Booulianne\u2019s (2009) analysis shows a clear relationship between online and offline engagement. Hence one could use Bouliane\u2019s research as a provocation to learn more about the specific relationship between social media use and influence.\nHowever internet and social media use and online activism are not synonymous. Thus Christensen\u2019s (2011) article titled \u201cPolitical activities on the Internet: Slacktivism or political participation by other means?\u201d discussing the implications of and incentives to engaging in online activism give a critical alternate perspective on the question of whether social media personalities practice authentic leadership. Throughout the article Christensen (2011) synthesized and examined prior research for and against his central hypothesis. Christensen\u2019s (2011) conclusion that online activities promote offline participation suggests that online influence has a more significant effect on offline behavior than many studies have shown. Ultimately Christensen\u2019s article contextualizes the data from previous research referenced in ways that facilitate further analysis based on the article\u2019s premises and its references. \nFinally Anderson and Auxier\u2019s (2021) online article for the Pew Research Center website about social media use provides a starting point for the survey\u2019s data analysis. The article titled \u201cSocial Media Use in 2021\u201d summarizes the results of Pew Research Center\u2019s annual survey on American social media use. In the article Anderson and Auxier (2021) present the survey results to support their conclusions drawn from the survey data. However as Anderson and Auxier do not use the data to support claims of either causation or correlation their findings function more as commentary to the data presented. The article\u2019s central idea is \u201ca majority of Americans say they use YouTube and Facebook while use of Instagram Snapchat and TikTok is especially common among adults under 30\u201d (Anderson & Auxier 2021 para. 1). In the scope of my research the article primarily functions as a prompt to further examine the data and determine correlation or causation through my own findings.\nUltimately my reflexivity influences and informs this research project. I am an avid user of social media across multiple platforms. I am aware that I am open to the influence of social media personalities and thus am likely to modify some aspects of my life based on their recommendation. More importantly I have on multiple occasions changed my attitude toward a particular concept idea or even a political candidate and ideology because of views and opinions expressed by social media personalities. \nMoreover I do not think that I am in the minority. Most social media users are also influenced by what they read hear and see. Nonetheless regardless of what I may anticipate finding I am eager to research this topic to discover the thoughts and opinions of others and learn how they experience social media activism and engagement. \nHowever it seems to me that scholars have largely ignored the impact power influence and leadership abilities of social media creators to mobilize large groups of people towards a common goal. I feel passionate that it is essential to learn understand and raise awareness of the significance of social media content creators in shaping public attitudes and behaviors. I hope that my research could inspire scholars and educators to take social media platforms more seriously and reflect on what ideas they choose to convey and prompt further research into this area.\n\nReferences\nAnderson C. He examines and critiques common approaches and ideas held in the academic community regarding authentic leadership theory. The author goes on to summarize and discuss current approaches to authentic leadership development. Berkovich (2010) identifies and discusses the central focus \u2018narrative identity processing\u2019 and \u2018dramaturgical enactment\u2019 of two of the foremost didactic methods for authentic leadership development. He then suggests a new perspective based in

and statistical data was used to quantify the results. Rogo et al. (2013) were able to conclude that \u201cthe findings suggest that AL [authentic leadership] predicts team potency via the mediating role of team virtuousness and team affective commitment\u201d (p. 75).\n\tMany of the studies which concern themselves with the effects of authentic leadership focus on individual follower outcomes. This study is rare in that is examines the effects of authentic leadership on group outcomes. This rarity makes it an exceptional resource for authentic leadership theory research. The authors described the concepts of authentic leadership which lead to their hypothesis in detail which provided ample supplementary information on their study topic. As with the studies conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) as well as Mehmood et al. (2016) the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors conclusions. \nShapira-Lishchinsky O. (2014). Toward developing authentic leadership: Team-based simulations. \tJournal of School Leadership 24(5) 979+. The study found that there were 2 main advantages of TBSs: TBSs create a supportive environment to learn from participant mistakes and TBSs heightened educational leader awareness of their caring responsibilities. Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014) was able to conclude that TBSs provide a framework for ethical discussion but did not ever establish a firm correlation between authentic leadership development in educational leaders and TBSs.\n\tAlthough this study is peer reviewed its results were not presented in the form of quantifiable data. While the study did include detailed research relating to authentic leadership and also clearly stated its methodology ultimately it is not the best resource for the study of authentic leadership theory. It does however provide ample information and examples which could be correlated with authentic leadership theory through conjecture and deduction.\nWulffers T. (2017). Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching \tApproach. KR Publishing; eBook Collection (EBSCOhost). \t <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=1595178&site=ehost-live\nWullffers (2017) begins by commenting on the state of leadership today and also examining the consequences of poor leadership. The author cites authentic leadership theory as a key method for achieving a better quality of leadership. Wullffers (2017) states that \u201cauthentic leaders are leaders who know who they are and who are true to themselves\u201d (p. 7). The book examines what authentic leadership is from a scholarly perspective and cites multiple literary works concerning the mechanisms of authentic leadership. The author then examines the components and methodologies of authentic leadership development. Wullffers (2017) describes leader authenticity as a spectrum with \u201cleadership development levels of maturity that shape the moral and cognitive capacities\u201d (p. 57) of leaders. The author then goes on to discuss how leaders may navigate up developmental levels. Finally Wulffers (2017) examines well known leaders through the lens of authentic leadership (p. 208).\n\tWhile the author does make some assertions this book functions mainly as an extended case study and detailed manual on how to achieve leader authenticity. The author heavily references previous literature on authentic

with Authentic Leadership Theory\n\n### Introduction\nSocial media has become a powerful force in shaping public opinions and attitudes. It serves as a dynamic platform where ideas are exchanged, and movements are born. The phenomenon of social media not only shaping public opinion but also reflecting it is intrinsically linked to the concept of authentic leadership. Authentic leadership emphasizes transparency, ethics, and a focus on the communal good, all of which are critical in the digital age where influencers hold significant sway over public discourse.\n\n### Data Collection and Methodology\nTo explore this phenomenon, data was gathered through a combination of literature review and qualitative analysis of social media interactions. Key sources include peer-reviewed articles, books on authentic leadership, and empirical studies on social media influence. Data on social media usage and its effects were obtained from reputable sources such as the Pew Research Center and various academic journals.\n\n### Terms Associated with the Phenomenon\n- Social Media Influence: The ability of individuals or groups to affect public opinion and behavior through social media platforms.\n- Authentic Leadership: A leadership style characterized by genuine, transparent, and ethical behavior that focuses on building trust and guiding others toward a common good.\n- Slacktivism: A pejorative term describing minimal effort activities (like sharing or liking posts) to support a cause on social media, often criticized as being ineffective compared to traditional activism.\n- Digital Activism: The use of digital tools, including social media, to promote, impede, direct, or intervene in social, political, economic, or environmental reform.\n\n### History of the Phenomenon\nThe role of social media in shaping public opinions became prominent in the early 21st century with the rise of platforms like Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube. Movements such as the Arab Spring (2011) and Occupy Wall Street (2011) demonstrated the power of social media in mobilizing people and spreading ideas rapidly. The #MeToo movement, initiated by Alyssa Milano's tweet in 2017, further showcased how social media could bring about significant social change by encouraging victims of sexual harassment and assault to speak out (Thomson, 2018).\n\n### Statistics\n- According to the Pew Research Center, approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some form of social media, with platforms like Facebook and YouTube being the most popular (Auxier & Anderson, 2021).\n- A 2019 Pew Research study found that 18% of Americans report that social media has a significant impact on their voting decisions, and 55% consider it their primary news source (Pew Research Center, 2019).\n- The influencer marketing industry is projected to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022, highlighting the economic impact of social media influencers (Business Insider Intelligence, 2021).\n\n### Authentic Leadership and Social Media\nAuthentic leadership theory, as defined by Northouse (2019), is the process by which an individual influences a group to achieve a common goal through genuine and ethical behavior. This aligns closely with the practices of many social media influencers who build their following through transparency and engagement with their audience. Influencers like Tarana Burke and Alyssa Milano have utilized their platforms to lead movements such as #MeToo, promoting societal values of justice and accountability (Mendes et al., 2018).\n\n### Social Media Reflecting and Shaping Public Opinion\nSocial media acts as both a mirror and a mold for public opinion. It reflects the current sentiments and attitudes of its users while also shaping those sentiments through the dissemination of information and the mobilization of collective action. For instance, during the 2016 U.S. presidential election, social media played a significant role in influencing voter perceptions through both genuine content and misinformation (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017).\n\n### Conclusion\nThe dual role of social media in shaping and reflecting public opinions and attitudes aligns with the principles of authentic leadership. Influencers who engage authentically with their followers can drive significant social change by promoting ethical behavior and communal values. As digital platforms continue to evolve, understanding the mechanisms of this influence becomes crucial for harnessing social media's power for positive societal impact.\n\nReferences\n- Allcott, H., & Gentzkow, M. He does not trust easily and always looks beyond what people say to determine their meaning. Consequently he is very hard to manipulate and very hard to influence and as such he is very hard to lead; he prefers to be in charge. Therefore he is skilled in convincing people. He knows how to influence others and lead people because as Northouse (2019) asserts leadership is an influence process.\nUnlike the author\u2019s fianc\u00e9 a significant portion of the population does not delve deeply into the authenticity of the information they receive; 18% of Americans report that social media has a significant impact on their voting decisions and 55% consider it their primary news source according to a 2019 Pew Research study. This widespread influence of social media raises a compelling question about the nature of leadership in the digital era. Building on Northouse's definition I intend to argue that the influence exerted by social media can be seen as a form of authentic leadership. This form of leadership practiced by social media influencers aligns closely with authentic leadership theory emphasizing transparency ethics and a focus on the communal good. Through their pervasive reach and often personal engagement with followers these influencers craft a modern leadership narrative that significantly shapes public opinions and societal values.\nThe influence of social media is profound and ubiquitous reaching across all sectors of society. According to the Pew Research Center approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some type of social media with varying impacts on social political and community engagement (Pew Research Center 2021). The breadth of this influence spans across diverse demographic groups making nearly everyone a potential recipient of communicated messages whether accurate or misleading.\nThe potential benefits of this influence include increased awareness and mobilization for social causes as seen with movements like #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter which have propelled significant societal shifts and brought critical issues to the forefront of global awareness. Social media influencers have played crucial roles in these movements utilizing their platforms to amplify voices and call for action. For instance prominent figures like Alyssa Milano and Tarana Burke have used their influence to promote the #MeToo movement leading to widespread discussions about sexual harassment and assault (Mendes et al. 2018).\nHowever the risks involve the spread of misinformation and manipulating public opinion which can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The cost of such influence can be seen in the widespread controversies surrounding elections and public policy debates where influencers have swayed public sentiment through both genuine and questionable means. For example during the 2016 U.S. presidential election false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots was found to have significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors (Allcott & Gentzkow 2017).\nThe individuals most impacted by this phenomenon include young adults who are the most active on platforms like Instagram and TikTok and are particularly susceptible to influencer marketing and political campaigns (Auxier & Anderson 2021). This demographic's high engagement levels highlight the critical need to understand the mechanisms of influence and leadership within these digital platforms. Research indicates that young people trust influencers more than traditional celebrities or politicians making them a key target for marketing and political messaging (Djafarova & Rushworth 2017).\nIn addition to social movements and political implications the economic impact of social media influence is significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry with brands leveraging the reach and authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence the influencer marketing industry is set to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence 2021). This economic dimension underscores the dual nature of influencer power: while it offers opportunities for authentic brand engagement it also raises questions about ethics and transparency in advertising.\nThe social significance of social media influence is further highlighted by its role in mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image particularly among young women. For example Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies. These findings suggest that while influencers can promote positive messages they also have the potential to contribute to harmful social norms.\nThis research project is situated at the intersection of leadership theory and digital media studies. It aims to critically analyze the role of social media influencers as contemporary leaders who not only entertain but also significantly influence societal values and norms. By aligning the characteristics of social media leadership with authentic leadership theories this study will evaluate the authenticity and ethical considerations of influencers' practices. The findings are expected to provide insights into how digital platforms can be harnessed for responsible and effective leadership promoting positive change while mitigating risks associated with digital influence. This foundational exploration sets the stage for a detailed literature review in Chapter 2 where theories of leadership and empirical studies on digital influence will be synthesized to build a comprehensive framework for understanding leadership in the digital age.\nReferences\nAllcott H. & Gentzkow M. The phenomenon where social media shapes and reflects public opinions is particularly significant when examined through the lens of authentic leadership theory. Authentic leadership, which emphasizes transparency, ethics, and a communal focus, aligns closely with the activities of social media influencers who wield substantial sway over their followers.\n\n#### Understanding the Phenomenon\n\nThe role of social media in influencing public opinion is both profound and pervasive. Approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some form of social media, with platforms such as Facebook and YouTube leading the way (Auxier & Anderson, 2021). This extensive reach ensures that nearly everyone is exposed to the opinions and ideas circulated on these platforms, whether accurate or misleading. Social media's impact is evident in various sectors, from political engagement to social movements, economic trends, and mental health.\n\n#### Data Collection and Methodology\n\nTo investigate this phenomenon, data was gathered through a comprehensive literature review and qualitative analysis of social media interactions. Sources included peer-reviewed articles, books on leadership theories, and empirical studies on social media's influence. Reputable institutions such as the Pew Research Center provided statistical data on social media usage and its societal impacts.\n\n#### Historical Context\n\nThe influence of social media on public opinion became noticeable in the early 21st century with the advent of platforms like Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube. Events such as the Arab Spring (2011) and Occupy Wall Street (2011) highlighted the power of social media to mobilize people and spread ideas rapidly. The #MeToo movement, which gained momentum through a tweet by Alyssa Milano in 2017, exemplified how social media could catalyze significant social change by encouraging victims of sexual harassment to speak out (Thomson, 2018).\n\n#### Authentic Leadership in Social Media\n\nAuthentic leadership, as defined by Northouse (2019), is a process where an individual influences others to achieve a common goal through genuine and ethical behavior. This concept is mirrored in the actions of social media influencers who build trust and engagement with their followers through transparency and authenticity. Influencers like Tarana Burke and Alyssa Milano have utilized their platforms to lead movements such as #MeToo, advocating for societal values of justice and accountability (Mendes et al., 2018).\n\nSocial media influencers often exemplify the core components of authentic leadership. They maintain a transparent and genuine presence online, which fosters trust and loyalty among their followers. This trust is critical, as it enables influencers to mobilize their audience for various causes, from social justice movements to political campaigns.\n\n#### Social Media as a Mirror and Mold\n\nSocial media's dual role as both a mirror and mold for public opinion is crucial to understanding its impact. It reflects current sentiments and attitudes while simultaneously shaping those sentiments through the dissemination of information and the mobilization of collective action. For instance, during the 2016 U.S. presidential election, social media significantly influenced voter perceptions through both authentic content and misinformation (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017).\n\nThe economic implications of social media influence are also significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry, with brands leveraging the reach and perceived authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence, the influencer marketing industry is projected to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence, 2021).\n\n#### Risks and Challenges\n\nWhile social media holds the potential for positive influence, it also poses risks. The spread of misinformation can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The controversies surrounding the 2016 U.S. presidential election, where false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors, exemplify this risk (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017).\n\nMoreover, the influence of social media extends to mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image, particularly among young women. For instance, Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction, mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies.\n\n#### Conclusion\n\nThe role of social media in shaping and reflecting public opinions and attitudes is intricately linked with the principles of authentic leadership. Influencers who engage authentically with their followers can drive significant social change by promoting ethical behavior and communal values. As digital platforms continue to evolve, understanding the mechanisms of this influence becomes crucial for harnessing social media's power for positive societal impact.\n\n#### References\n\n- Allcott, H., & Gentzkow, M. Authentic leadership emphasizes transparency, ethics, and a communal focus, traits that are increasingly observed in the activities of social media influencers. These influencers not only shape public discourse but also reflect societal values and norms, thereby serving as contemporary leaders in the digital age.\n\n#### The Phenomenon\nSocial media's role in shaping public opinion is both profound and multifaceted. Platforms like Facebook, Twitter, and Instagram have transformed how information is disseminated and consumed, making them critical in influencing public sentiment. According to the Pew Research Center, approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some form of social media, which underscores its pervasive reach (Auxier & Anderson, 2021). The ability of social media to influence public opinion is evident in various domains, including politics, social movements, economics, and mental health.\n\n#### Data Collection and Methodology\nTo understand this phenomenon, data was collected through a detailed literature review and qualitative analysis of social media interactions. This included reviewing peer-reviewed articles, books on leadership theories, and empirical studies on social media influence. Statistical data from reputable sources, such as the Pew Research Center, provided insights into social media usage patterns and their societal impacts.\n\n#### Historical Context\nThe impact of social media on public opinion became prominent in the early 21st century. Events like the Arab Spring (2011) and Occupy Wall Street (2011) highlighted social media's power to mobilize people and spread ideas quickly. The #MeToo movement, which gained traction from a tweet by Alyssa Milano in 2017, further exemplified how social media can drive significant social change by encouraging victims of sexual harassment to speak out (Thomson, 2018).\n\n#### Social Media and Authentic Leadership\nAuthentic leadership is defined by Northouse (2019) as a process whereby an individual influences a group to achieve a common goal through genuine and ethical behavior. This concept is embodied by social media influencers who engage with their followers transparently and authentically. Influencers like Tarana Burke and Alyssa Milano have leveraged their platforms to lead movements such as #MeToo, advocating for societal values of justice and accountability (Mendes et al., 2018).\n\nSocial media influencers often exhibit the core elements of authentic leadership. The spread of misinformation can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The controversies surrounding the 2016 U.S. presidential election, where false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors, illustrate this risk (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017).\n\nSocial media also affects mental health, particularly among young women. It aims to critically analyze the role of social media influencers as contemporary leaders who not only entertain but also significantly influence societal values and norms. By aligning the characteristics of social media leadership with authentic leadership theories, this study will evaluate the authenticity and ethical considerations of influencers' practices. The findings are expected to provide insights into how digital platforms can be harnessed for responsible and effective leadership, promoting positive change while mitigating risks associated with digital influence. This foundational exploration sets the stage for an in-depth examination in the following chapters, beginning with an analysis of how social media shapes and reflects public opinions and attitudes in the context of authentic leadership.\n\n### Chapter 2: Social Media Shaping and Reflecting Public Opinions and Attitudes Through the Lens of Authentic Leadership Theory\n\nIn the contemporary digital era, social media has emerged as a formidable force influencing public opinions and attitudes. The phenomenon where social media both shapes and reflects public opinions is particularly significant when examined through the lens of authentic leadership theory. Authentic leadership, which emphasizes transparency, ethics, and a communal focus, aligns closely with the activities of social media influencers who wield substantial sway over their followers.\n\nThe role of social media in influencing public opinion is both profound and pervasive. Approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some form of social media, with platforms such as Facebook and YouTube leading the way (Auxier & Anderson, 2021). This extensive reach ensures that nearly everyone is exposed to the opinions and ideas circulated on these platforms, whether accurate or misleading. The impact of social media is evident in various sectors, from political engagement to social movements, economic trends, and mental health.\n\nTo investigate this phenomenon, data was gathered through a comprehensive literature review and qualitative analysis of social media interactions. Sources included peer-reviewed articles, books on leadership theories, and empirical studies on social media's influence. Reputable institutions such as the Pew Research Center provided statistical data on social media usage and its societal impacts.\n\nThe influence of social media on public opinion became noticeable in the early 21st century with the advent of platforms like Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube. Events such as the Arab Spring (2011) and Occupy Wall Street (2011) highlighted the power of social media to mobilize people and spread ideas rapidly. The #MeToo movement, which gained momentum through a tweet by Alyssa Milano in 2017, exemplified how social media could catalyze significant social change by encouraging victims of sexual harassment to speak out (Thomson, 2018).\n\nAuthentic leadership, as defined by Northouse (2019), is a process where an individual influences others to achieve a common goal through genuine and ethical behavior. This concept is mirrored in the actions of social media influencers who build trust and engagement with their followers through transparency and authenticity. Influencers like Tarana Burke and Alyssa Milano have utilized their platforms to lead movements such as #MeToo, advocating for societal values of justice and accountability (Mendes et al., 2018). These influencers often exemplify the core components of authentic leadership by maintaining a transparent and genuine presence online, fostering trust and loyalty among their followers. This trust is critical, as it enables influencers to mobilize their audience for various causes, from social justice movements to political campaigns.\n\nSocial media acts as both a mirror and a mold for public opinion, reflecting current sentiments and attitudes while simultaneously shaping those sentiments through the dissemination of information and the mobilization of collective action. For instance, during the 2016 U.S. presidential election, social media significantly influenced voter perceptions through both authentic content and misinformation (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017). The economic implications of social media influence are also significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry, with brands leveraging the reach and perceived authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence, the influencer marketing industry is projected to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence, 2021).\n\nWhile social media holds the potential for positive influence, it also poses risks. The spread of misinformation can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The controversies surrounding the 2016 U.S. presidential election, where false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors, exemplify this risk (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017). Moreover, the influence of social media extends to mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image, particularly among young women. For instance, Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction, mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies.\n\nThe role of social media in shaping and reflecting public opinions and attitudes is intricately linked with the principles of authentic leadership. Influencers who engage authentically with their followers can drive significant social change by promoting ethical behavior and communal values. As digital platforms continue to evolve, understanding the mechanisms of this influence becomes crucial for harnessing social media's power for positive societal impact.\n\n#### References\n\n- Allcott, H.,

Introduction. He does not trust easily and always looks beyond what people say to determine their meaning. Consequently he is very hard to manipulate and very hard to influence and as such he is very hard to lead; he prefers to be in charge. Therefore he is skilled in convincing people. He knows how to influence others and lead people because as Northouse (2019) asserts leadership is an influence process.\nUnlike the author\u2019s fianc\u00e9 a significant portion of the population does not delve deeply into the authenticity of the information they receive; 18% of Americans report that social media has a significant impact on their voting decisions and 55% consider it their primary news source according to a 2019 Pew Research study. This widespread influence of social media raises a compelling question about the nature of leadership in the digital era. Building on Northouse's definition I intend to argue that the influence exerted by social media can be seen as a form of authentic leadership. This form of leadership practiced by social media influencers aligns closely with authentic leadership theory emphasizing transparency ethics and a focus on the communal good. Through their pervasive reach and often personal engagement with followers these influencers craft a modern leadership narrative that significantly shapes public opinions and societal values.\nSocial Significance\nThe influence of social media is profound and ubiquitous reaching across all sectors of society. According to the Pew Research Center approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some type of social media with varying impacts on social political and community engagement (Pew Research Center 2021). The breadth of this influence spans across diverse demographic groups making nearly everyone a potential recipient of communicated messages whether accurate or misleading.\nThe potential benefits of this influence include increased awareness and mobilization for social causes as seen with movements like #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter which have propelled significant societal shifts and brought critical issues to the forefront of global awareness. Social media influencers have played crucial roles in these movements utilizing their platforms to amplify voices and call for action. For instance prominent figures like Alyssa Milano and Tarana Burke have used their influence to promote the #MeToo movement leading to widespread discussions about sexual harassment and assault (Mendes et al. 2018).\nHowever the risks involve the spread of misinformation and manipulating public opinion which can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The cost of such influence can be seen in the widespread controversies surrounding elections and public policy debates where influencers have swayed public sentiment through both genuine and questionable means. For example during the 2016 U.S. presidential election false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots was found to have significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors (Allcott & Gentzkow 2017).\nThe individuals most impacted by this phenomenon include young adults who are the most active on platforms like Instagram and TikTok and are particularly susceptible to influencer marketing and political campaigns (Auxier & Anderson 2021). This demographic's high engagement levels highlight the critical need to understand the mechanisms of influence and leadership within these digital platforms. Research indicates that young people trust influencers more than traditional celebrities or politicians making them a key target for marketing and political messaging (Djafarova & Rushworth 2017).\nIn addition to social movements and political implications the economic impact of social media influence is significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry with brands leveraging the reach and authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence the influencer marketing industry is set to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence 2021). This economic dimension underscores the dual nature of influencer power: while it offers opportunities for authentic brand engagement it also raises questions about ethics and transparency in advertising.\nThe social significance of social media influence is further highlighted by its role in mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image particularly among young women. For example Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies. These findings suggest that while influencers can promote positive messages they also have the potential to contribute to harmful social norms.\nConclusion\nThis research project is situated at the intersection of leadership theory and digital media studies. It aims to critically analyze the role of social media influencers as contemporary leaders who not only entertain but also significantly influence societal values and norms. By aligning the characteristics of social media leadership with authentic leadership theories this study will evaluate the authenticity and ethical considerations of influencers' practices. The findings are expected to provide insights into how digital platforms can be harnessed for responsible and effective leadership promoting positive change while mitigating risks associated with digital influence. This foundational exploration sets the stage for a detailed literature review in Chapter 2 where theories of leadership and empirical studies on digital influence will be synthesized to build a comprehensive framework for understanding leadership in the digital age.\nReferences\nAllcott H. & Gentzkow M. It aims to critically analyze the role of social media influencers as contemporary leaders who not only entertain but also significantly influence societal values and norms. By aligning the characteristics of social media leadership with authentic leadership theories, this study will evaluate the authenticity and ethical considerations of influencers' practices. The findings are expected to provide insights into how digital platforms can be harnessed for responsible and effective leadership, promoting positive change while mitigating risks associated with digital influence. This foundational exploration sets the stage for an in-depth analysis in the following chapters, with Chapter 2 delving into how social media shapes and reflects public opinions and attitudes, followed by a detailed literature review in Chapter 3, where theories of leadership and empirical studies on digital influence will be synthesized to build a comprehensive framework for understanding leadership in the digital age.\n\n### Chapter 2: Social Media Shaping and Reflecting Public Opinions and Attitudes Through the Lens of Authentic Leadership Theory\n\nIn the contemporary digital era, social media has emerged as a formidable force influencing public opinions and attitudes. The phenomenon where social media both shapes and reflects public opinions is particularly significant when examined through the lens of authentic leadership theory. Authentic leadership, which emphasizes transparency, ethics, and a communal focus, aligns closely with the activities of social media influencers who wield substantial sway over their followers.\n\nThe role of social media in influencing public opinion is both profound and pervasive. Approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some form of social media, with platforms such as Facebook and YouTube leading the way (Auxier & Anderson, 2021). This extensive reach ensures that nearly everyone is exposed to the opinions and ideas circulated on these platforms, whether accurate or misleading. The impact of social media is evident in various sectors, from political engagement to social movements, economic trends, and mental health.\n\nTo investigate this phenomenon, data was gathered through a comprehensive literature review and qualitative analysis of social media interactions. Sources included peer-reviewed articles, books on leadership theories, and empirical studies on social media's influence. Reputable institutions such as the Pew Research Center provided statistical data on social media usage and its societal impacts.\n\nThe influence of social media on public opinion became noticeable in the early 21st century with the advent of platforms like Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube. Events such as the Arab Spring (2011) and Occupy Wall Street (2011) highlighted the power of social media to mobilize people and spread ideas rapidly. The #MeToo movement, which gained momentum through a tweet by Alyssa Milano in 2017, exemplified how social media could catalyze significant social change by encouraging victims of sexual harassment to speak out (Thomson, 2018).\n\nAuthentic leadership, as defined by Northouse (2019), is a process where an individual influences others to achieve a common goal through genuine and ethical behavior. This concept is mirrored in the actions of social media influencers who build trust and engagement with their followers through transparency and authenticity. Influencers like Tarana Burke and Alyssa Milano have utilized their platforms to lead movements such as #MeToo, advocating for societal values of justice and accountability (Mendes et al., 2018). These influencers often exemplify the core components of authentic leadership by maintaining a transparent and genuine presence online, fostering trust and loyalty among their followers. This trust is critical, as it enables influencers to mobilize their audience for various causes, from social justice movements to political campaigns.\n\nSocial media acts as both a mirror and a mold for public opinion, reflecting current sentiments and attitudes while simultaneously shaping those sentiments through the dissemination of information and the mobilization of collective action. For instance, during the 2016 U.S. presidential election, social media significantly influenced voter perceptions through both authentic content and misinformation (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017). The economic implications of social media influence are also significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry, with brands leveraging the reach and perceived authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence, the influencer marketing industry is projected to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence, 2021).\n\nWhile social media holds the potential for positive influence, it also poses risks. The spread of misinformation can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The controversies surrounding the 2016 U.S. presidential election, where false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors, exemplify this risk (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017). Moreover, the influence of social media extends to mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image, particularly among young women. For instance, Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction, mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies.\n\nThe role of social media in shaping and reflecting public opinions and attitudes is intricately linked with the principles of authentic leadership. Influencers who engage authentically with their followers can drive significant social change by promoting ethical behavior and communal values. As digital platforms continue to evolve, understanding the mechanisms of this influence becomes crucial for harnessing social media's power for positive societal impact.\n\n#### References\n\n- Allcott, H., & Gentzkow, M. (2017). Modern political candidates in America have recognized the necessity of maintaining a robust online presence. Platforms like Twitter and Facebook are not only used for engagement but also for major announcements, policy declarations, and real-time interaction with constituents. For instance, former President Donald Trump famously used Twitter to communicate directly with the public and announce significant policy decisions, thereby bypassing traditional media channels (Heilweil & Ghaffary, 2021). This direct communication method aligns with the principles of authentic leadership, where transparency and direct engagement are paramount.\n\nAuthentic leadership, as defined by Northouse (2019), is a process where an individual influences others to achieve a common goal through genuine and ethical behavior. They feel that government leaders and politicians undermine the seriousness and importance of their positions when they use lighthearted TikTok videos to promote their message or agenda. Additionally, they believe that such displays reflect the sensationalism and showmanship of American politics. In contrast to their opinion, a Pew Research study in 2023 found that over 50% of adults surveyed reported getting their news from social media at least sometimes.\n\nOn July 21st, 2024, President Joe Biden announced his decision not to seek re-election in the fall. This historic announcement, marking the first time in over fifty years that a sitting president refused their party's nomination, was made using the platform now known as X. The use of social media highlights its efficiency in disseminating information and providing individuals with the opportunity to engage in the public sphere, gain followers, and exert influence on an unprecedented scale.\n\nIn the contemporary digital era, social media has emerged as a formidable force influencing public opinions and attitudes. The phenomenon where social media both shapes and reflects public opinions is particularly significant when examined through the lens of authentic leadership theory. Authentic leadership, which emphasizes transparency, ethics, and a communal focus, aligns closely with the activities of social media influencers who wield substantial sway over their followers.\n\nThe role of social media in influencing public opinion is both profound and pervasive. Approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some form of social media, with platforms such as Facebook and YouTube leading the way (Auxier & Anderson, 2021). This extensive reach ensures that nearly everyone is exposed to the opinions and ideas circulated on these platforms, whether accurate or misleading. The impact of social media is evident in various sectors, from political engagement to social movements, economic trends, and mental health.\n\nTo investigate this phenomenon, data was gathered through a comprehensive literature review and qualitative analysis of social media interactions. Sources included peer-reviewed articles, books on leadership theories, and empirical studies on social media's influence. Reputable institutions such as the Pew Research Center provided statistical data on social media usage and its societal impacts.\n\nThe influence of social media on public opinion became noticeable in the early 21st century with the advent of platforms like Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube. Events such as the Arab Spring (2011) and Occupy Wall Street (2011) highlighted the power of social media to mobilize people and spread ideas rapidly. The #MeToo movement, which gained momentum through a tweet by Alyssa Milano in 2017, exemplified how social media could catalyze significant social change by encouraging victims of sexual harassment to speak out (Thomson, 2018).\n\nIn addition to social movements, social media's influence extends deeply into the political sphere. Modern political candidates in America have recognized the necessity of maintaining a robust online presence. Platforms like Twitter and Facebook are not only used for engagement but also for major announcements, policy declarations, and real-time interaction with constituents. For instance, former President Donald Trump famously used Twitter to communicate directly with the public and announce significant policy decisions, thereby bypassing traditional media channels (Heilweil & Ghaffary, 2021). This direct communication method aligns with the principles of authentic leadership, where transparency and direct engagement are paramount.\n\nAuthentic leadership, as defined by Northouse (2019), is a process where an individual influences others to achieve a common goal through genuine and ethical behavior. This concept is mirrored in the actions of social media influencers who build trust and engagement with their followers through transparency and authenticity. Influencers like Tarana Burke and Alyssa Milano have utilized their platforms to lead movements such as #MeToo, advocating for societal values of justice and accountability (Mendes et al., 2018). These influencers often exemplify the core components of authentic leadership by maintaining a transparent and genuine presence online, fostering trust and loyalty among their followers. This trust is critical, as it enables influencers to mobilize their audience for various causes, from social justice movements to political campaigns.\n\nSocial media acts as both a mirror and a mold for public opinion, reflecting current sentiments and attitudes while simultaneously shaping those sentiments through the dissemination of information and the mobilization of collective action. For instance, during the 2016 U.S. presidential election, social media significantly influenced voter perceptions through both authentic content and misinformation (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017). The economic implications of social media influence are also significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry, with brands leveraging the reach and perceived authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence, the influencer marketing industry is projected to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence, 2021).\n\nWhile social media holds the potential for positive influence, it also poses risks. The spread of misinformation can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The controversies surrounding the 2016 U.S. presidential election, where false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors, exemplify this risk (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017). Moreover, the influence of social media extends to mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image, particularly among young women. For instance, Fardouly et al. (2015) found that

Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction, mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies.\n\nThe role of social media in shaping and reflecting public opinions and attitudes is intricately linked with the principles of authentic leadership. Influencers who engage authentically with their followers can drive significant social change by promoting ethical behavior and communal values. As digital platforms continue to evolve, understanding the mechanisms of this influence becomes crucial for harnessing social media's power for positive societal impact.\n\n#### References\n\n- Allcott, H., & Gentzkow, M. He does not trust easily and always looks beyond what people say to determine their meaning. Consequently he is very hard to manipulate and very hard to influence and as such he is very hard to lead; he prefers to be in charge. Therefore he is skilled in convincing people. He knows how to influence others and lead people because as Northouse (2019) asserts leadership is an influence process.\nUnlike the author\u2019s fianc\u00e9 a significant portion of the population does not delve deeply into the authenticity of the information they receive; 18% of Americans report that social media has a significant impact on their voting decisions and 55% consider it their primary news source according to a 2019 Pew Research study. This widespread influence of social media raises a compelling question about the nature of leadership in the digital era. Building on Northouse's definition I intend to argue that the influence exerted by social media can be seen as a form of authentic leadership. This form of leadership practiced by social media influencers aligns closely with authentic leadership theory emphasizing transparency ethics and a focus on the communal good. Through their pervasive reach and often personal engagement with followers these influencers craft a modern leadership narrative that significantly shapes public opinions and societal values.\nSocial Significance\nThe influence of social media is profound and ubiquitous reaching across all sectors of society. According to the Pew Research Center approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some type of social media with varying impacts on social political and community engagement (Pew Research Center 2021). The breadth of this influence spans across diverse demographic groups making nearly everyone a potential recipient of communicated messages whether accurate or misleading.\nThe potential benefits of this influence include increased awareness and mobilization for social causes as seen with movements like #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter which have propelled significant societal shifts and brought critical issues to the forefront of global awareness. Social media influencers have played crucial roles in these movements utilizing their platforms to amplify voices and call for action. For instance prominent figures like Alyssa Milano and Tarana Burke have used their influence to promote the #MeToo movement leading to widespread discussions about sexual harassment and assault (Mendes et al. 2018).\nHowever the risks involve the spread of misinformation and manipulating public opinion which can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The cost of such influence can be seen in the widespread controversies surrounding elections and public policy debates where influencers have swayed public sentiment through both genuine and questionable means. For example during the 2016 U.S. presidential election false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots was found to have significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors (Allcott & Gentzkow 2017).\nThe individuals most impacted by this phenomenon include young adults who are the most active on platforms like Instagram and TikTok and are particularly susceptible to influencer marketing and political campaigns (Auxier & Anderson 2021). This demographic's high engagement levels highlight the critical need to understand the mechanisms of influence and leadership within these digital platforms. Research indicates that young people trust influencers more than traditional celebrities or politicians making them a key target for marketing and political messaging (Djafarova & Rushworth 2017).\nIn addition to social movements and political implications the economic impact of social media influence is significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry with brands leveraging the reach and authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence the influencer marketing industry is set to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence 2021). This economic dimension underscores the dual nature of influencer power: while it offers opportunities for authentic brand engagement it also raises questions about ethics and transparency in advertising.\nThe social significance of social media influence is further highlighted by its role in mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image particularly among young women. For example Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies. These findings suggest that while influencers can promote positive messages they also have the potential to contribute to harmful social norms.\nConclusion\nThis research project is situated at the intersection of leadership theory and digital media studies. It aims to critically analyze the role of social media influencers as contemporary leaders who not only entertain but also significantly influence societal values and norms. By aligning the characteristics of social media leadership with authentic leadership theories this study will evaluate the authenticity and ethical considerations of influencers' practices. The findings are expected to provide insights into how digital platforms can be harnessed for responsible and effective leadership promoting positive change while mitigating risks associated with digital influence. This foundational exploration sets the stage for a detailed literature review in Chapter 2 where theories of leadership and empirical studies on digital influence will be synthesized to build a comprehensive framework for understanding leadership in the digital age.\n\n\nCHAPTER 2: Identification of Phenomenon\n\nThe author's fianc\u00e9 does not consider social media such as TikTok and Twitter as reliable sources of information. He feels that government leaders and politicians undermine the seriousness and importance of their positions when they use lighthearted TikTok videos to promote their message or agenda. Additionally he believes such displays reflect American politics' sensationalism and showmanship. In contrast to their opinion a Pew Research study in 2023 found that over 50% of adults surveyed reported getting their news from social media at least sometimes (Social Media and News Fact Sheet 2023).\nOn July 21st 2024 President Joe Biden announced his decision not to seek re-election in the fall. This historic announcement marking the first time in over fifty years that a sitting president refused their party's nomination was made using the platform now known as X (Mason et al. 2024). The use of social media highlights its efficiency in disseminating information and providing individuals with the opportunity to engage in the public sphere gain followers and exert influence on an unprecedented scale.\nIn the contemporary digital era social media has emerged as a formidable force influencing public opinions and attitudes. This phenomenon where social media both shapes and reflects public opinions is particularly significant when examined through the lens of authentic leadership theory. The sources encompassed peer-reviewed articles books on leadership theories and empirical studies on social media's influence. Statistical data on social media usage and its societal impacts was provided by reputable institutions such as the Pew Research Center.\nThe influence of social media on public opinion became noticeable in the early 21st century with the advent of platforms like Facebook Twitter and YouTube. Events such as the Arab Spring (2011) and Occupy Wall Street (2011) highlighted the power of social media to mobilize people and spread ideas rapidly. The #MeToo movement which gained momentum through a tweet by Alyssa Milano in 2017 exemplified how social media could catalyze significant social change by encouraging victims of sexual harassment to speak out (Thomson 2018).\nIn addition to social movements social media's influence extends deeply into the political sphere. Modern political candidates in America have recognized the necessity of maintaining a robust online presence. Platforms like Twitter and Facebook are not only used for engagement but also for major announcements policy declarations and real-time interaction with constituents. For instance former President Donald Trump famously used Twitter to communicate directly with the public and announce significant policy decisions bypassing traditional media channels (Heilweil & Ghaffary 2021). This direct communication method aligns with the principles of authentic leadership where transparency and direct engagement are paramount.\nAuthentic leadership as defined by Northouse (2019) is a process where an individual influences others to achieve a common goal through genuine and ethical behavior. This concept is mirrored in the actions of social media influencers who build trust and engagement with their followers through transparency and authenticity. Influencers like Tarana Burke and Alyssa Milano have utilized their platforms to lead movements such as #MeToo advocating for societal values of justice and accountability (Mendes et al. 2018). These influencers often exemplify the core components of authentic leadership by maintaining a transparent and genuine presence online fostering trust and loyalty among their followers. This trust is critical enabling influencers to mobilize their audience for various causes from social justice movements to political campaigns.\nSocial media acts as both a mirror and a mold for public opinion reflecting current sentiments and attitudes while simultaneously shaping those sentiments through disseminating information and mobilizing collective action. For instance during the 2016 U.S. presidential election social media significantly influenced voter perceptions through authentic content and misinformation (Allcott & Gentzkow 2017). The economic implications of social media influence are also significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry with brands leveraging influencers' reach and perceived authenticity to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence the influencer marketing industry is projected to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence 2021).\nWhile social media holds the potential for positive influence it also poses risks. The spread of misinformation can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The controversies surrounding the 2016 U.S. presidential election exemplify this risk where false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors (Allcott & Gentzkow 2017). Moreover the influence of social media extends to mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image particularly among young women. For instance Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies.\nThe role of social media in shaping and reflecting public opinions and attitudes is intricately linked with the principles of authentic leadership. Influencers who engage authentically with their followers can drive significant social change by promoting ethical behavior and communal values. As digital platforms continue to evolve understanding the mechanisms of this influence becomes crucial for harnessing social media's power for positive societal impact.\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\nReferences\nAllcott H. & Gentzkow M. {"content_type": "text", "parts": ["Chapter 2: Social Media Shaping and Reflecting Public Opinions and Attitudes Through the Lens of Authentic Leadership Theory\nThe author's fianc\u00e9 does not consider social media, such as TikTok and Twitter, as reliable sources of information. They feel that government leaders and politicians undermine the seriousness and importance of their positions when they use lighthearted TikTok videos to promote their message or agenda. Additionally, they believe that such displays reflect the sensationalism and showmanship of American politics. In contrast to their opinion, a Pew Research study in 2023 found that over 50% of adults surveyed reported getting their news from social media at least sometimes.\n\nOn July 21st, 2024, President Joe Biden announced his decision not to seek re-election in the fall. This historic announcement, marking the first time in over fifty years that a sitting president refused their party's nomination, was made using the platform now known as X. The use of social media highlights its efficiency in disseminating information and providing individuals with the opportunity to engage in the public sphere, gain followers, and exert influence on an unprecedented scale.\n\nIn the contemporary digital era, social media has emerged as a formidable force influencing public opinions and attitudes. The phenomenon where social media both shapes and reflects public opinions is particularly significant when examined through the lens of authentic leadership theory. Authentic leadership, which emphasizes transparency, ethics, and a communal focus, aligns closely with the activities of social media influencers who wield substantial sway over their followers.\n\nThe role of social media in influencing public opinion is both profound and pervasive. Approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some form of social media, with platforms such as Facebook and YouTube leading the way (Auxier & Anderson, 2021). This extensive reach ensures that nearly everyone is exposed to the opinions and ideas circulated on these platforms, whether accurate or misleading. The impact of social media is evident in various sectors, from political engagement to social movements, economic trends, and mental health.\n\nTo investigate this phenomenon, data was gathered through a comprehensive literature review and qualitative analysis of social media interactions. Sources included peer-reviewed articles, books on leadership theories, and empirical studies on social media's influence. Reputable institutions such as the Pew Research Center provided statistical data on social media usage and its societal impacts.\n\nThe influence of social media on public opinion became noticeable in the early 21st century with the advent of platforms like Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube. Events such as the Arab Spring (2011) and Occupy Wall Street (2011) highlighted the power of social media to mobilize people and spread ideas rapidly. Modern political candidates in America have recognized the necessity of maintaining a robust online presence. Platforms like Twitter and Facebook are not only used for engagement but also for major announcements, policy declarations, and real-time interaction with constituents. For instance, former President Donald Trump famously used Twitter to communicate directly with the public and announce significant policy decisions, thereby bypassing traditional media channels (Heilweil & Ghaffary, 2021). This direct communication method aligns with the principles of authentic leadership, where transparency and direct engagement are paramount.\n\nAuthentic leadership, as defined by Northouse (2019), is a process where an individual influences others to achieve a

For instance, during the 2016 U.S. presidential election, social media significantly influenced voter perceptions through both authentic content and misinformation (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017). The economic implications of social media influence are also significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry, with brands leveraging the reach and perceived authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence, the influencer marketing industry is projected to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence, 2021).\n\nWhile social media holds the potential for positive influence, it also poses risks. The spread of misinformation can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The controversies surrounding the 2016 U.S. presidential election, where false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors, exemplify this risk (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017). Moreover, the influence of social media extends to mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image, particularly among young women. This chapter should be 8-12 pages].\n\nSuccess Resources:\nWhat is a literature review? https://researchguides.uoregon.edu/litreview/synthesize#:~:text=About%20Synthesis&text=Combining%20elements%20of%20several%20sourcesnew%20ideas%20to%20existing%20knowledge\nHow to write a literature review\nhttps://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Vc_Yu_61Ymg\n\nSome themes that might be found in the research:\nExample topic: food shortage\nExample project: create a food resource flyer to post around local community\nSome themes that might be found in the research: how many people have a food shortage what communities struggle the most with food supply what is nourishing food what is a food resource how food resources get funded how food resources get food to share how restaurants might help how to volunteer what other communities/program could be used as a prototype to follow how to distribute flyers how to create informative flyers how to create engaging flyers etc.\nCHAPTER 4: Solutions\n[Project Goal]\n[In chapters one through three the field/topic/problem that deserves attention and carries social significance was defined and described. Both theory and practice were explored through the research in the literature review. With these chapters and any conversations with mentors in mind carefully craft a narrative that addresses the change (campaign initiative resource) being proposed.\nExplain briefly what this change is and why this change should take place. If a research question(s) is appropriate for the project please provide it/them. This section will include 3-5 pages that provide the process of the solution being proposed to implement.\nThis section must include research explaining why this solution is the best course of action. Examples might include training website blog Wiki page social media campaign evaluation process and rubric organizational philosophy mission/vision/values statement course syllabus webinar etc.] \n[Implementation]\n[Drawing from the goals narrated upload fully developed materials that would be used in implementation of the proposed solution. This might include video PowerPoint training manual quizzes handouts links etc. This is a substantial portion of the project and these materials should address how the proposed solution will be implemented from start to finish.\n[Project Measurements]\n\t[In this section describe what is being measured and what methods will be used to measure the success of the proposed project. In the design of the project plan think about how to measure successes/failures of the proposed solution. Once it\u2019s determined what to measure explain how to measure them. Like the section above this project proposal illustrates the researcher\u2019s expertise and informed process: explain what elements are being measured and why they are being chosen to measure; what is being measured and the methods being used to measure the project\u2019s outcome. Share the logic and thought process behind the measurements of the project.]\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\nCHAPTER 5: Reflections and Recommendations\nProject Summary\n\t[Briefly summarize the goal for the project the actions that were taken and the results realized.]\nReflections\n[Reflect on the project in its entirety. He does not trust easily and always looks beyond what people say to determine their meaning. Consequently he is very hard to manipulate and very hard to influence and as such he is very hard to lead; he prefers to be in charge. Therefore he is skilled in convincing people. He knows how to influence others and lead people because as Northouse (2019) asserts leadership is an influence process.\nUnlike the author\u2019s fianc\u00e9 a significant portion of the population does not delve deeply into the authenticity of the information they receive; 18% of Americans report that social media has a significant impact on their voting decisions and 55% consider it their primary news source according to a 2019 Pew Research study. This widespread influence of social media raises a compelling question about the nature of leadership in the digital era. Building on Northouse's definition I intend to argue that the influence exerted by social media can be seen as a form of authentic leadership. This form of leadership practiced by social media influencers aligns closely with authentic leadership theory emphasizing transparency ethics and a focus on the communal good. Through their pervasive reach and often personal engagement with followers these influencers craft a modern leadership narrative that significantly shapes public opinions and societal values.\nSocial Significance\nThe influence of social media is profound and ubiquitous reaching across all sectors of society. According to the Pew Research Center approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some type of social media with varying impacts on social political and community engagement (Pew Research Center 2021). The breadth of this influence spans across diverse demographic groups making nearly everyone a potential recipient of communicated messages whether accurate or misleading.\nThe potential benefits of this influence include increased awareness and mobilization for social causes as seen with movements like #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter which have propelled significant societal shifts and brought critical issues to the forefront of global awareness. Social media influencers have played crucial roles in these movements utilizing their platforms to amplify voices and call for action. For instance prominent figures like Alyssa Milano and Tarana Burke have used their influence to promote the #MeToo movement leading to widespread discussions about sexual harassment and assault (Mendes et al. 2018).\nHowever the risks involve the spread of misinformation and manipulating public opinion which can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The cost of such influence can be seen in the widespread controversies surrounding elections and public policy debates where influencers have swayed public sentiment through both genuine and questionable means. For example during the 2016 U.S. presidential election false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots was found to have significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors (Allcott & Gentzkow 2017).\nThe individuals most impacted by this phenomenon include young adults who are the most active on platforms like Instagram and TikTok and are particularly susceptible to influencer marketing and political campaigns (Auxier & Anderson 2021). This demographic's high engagement levels highlight the critical need to understand the mechanisms of influence and leadership within these digital platforms. Research indicates that young people trust influencers more than traditional celebrities or politicians making them a key target for marketing and political messaging (Djafarova & Rushworth 2017).\nIn addition to social movements and political implications the economic impact of social media influence is significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry with brands leveraging the reach and authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence the influencer marketing industry is set to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence 2021). This economic dimension underscores the dual nature of influencer power: while it offers opportunities for authentic brand engagement it also raises questions about ethics and transparency in advertising.\nThe social significance of social media influence is further highlighted by its role in mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image particularly among young women. For example Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies. These findings suggest that while influencers can promote positive messages they also have the potential to contribute to harmful social norms.\nConclusion\nThis research project is situated at the intersection of leadership theory and digital media studies. It aims to critically analyze the role of social media influencers as contemporary leaders who not only entertain but also significantly influence societal values and norms. By aligning the characteristics of social media leadership with authentic leadership theories this study will evaluate the authenticity and ethical considerations of influencers' practices. The findings are expected to provide insights into how digital platforms can be harnessed for responsible and effective leadership promoting positive change while mitigating risks associated with digital influence. This foundational exploration sets the stage for a detailed literature review in Chapter 2 where theories of leadership and empirical studies on digital influence will be synthesized to build a comprehensive framework for understanding leadership in the digital age.\nReferences\nAllcott H. & Gentzkow M. It aligns well with the instructions for Chapter 2 in the template, which emphasize identifying a contemporary and relevant phenomenon and providing a thorough examination supported by research.\n\n### Alignment with Chapter 1\n\n1. Continuation of Themes: Chapter 2 builds on the introduction by further exploring the influence of social media on public opinion and leadership. This is a logical progression from Chapter 1, which introduced the significant role of social media in shaping contemporary leadership.\n\n2. Use of Authentic Leadership Theory: The chapter continues to employ authentic leadership theory as a lens through which to analyze social media influencers. This maintains consistency with Chapter 1, which framed social media influence within this theoretical context.\n\n### Alignment with Capstone Template Instructions\n\n1. Identification of Phenomenon: The phenomenon of social media shaping and reflecting public opinions and attitudes is clearly identified. The chapter explains the specific ways in which social media impacts various aspects of society, from political engagement to mental health.\n\n2. Research and Data: The chapter includes data from reputable sources such as the Pew Research Center, as well as examples from significant social movements and political events. This comprehensive approach to gathering information supports the examination of the phenomenon.\n\n3. Terms and Concepts: The chapter discusses key terms and concepts related to social media influence and authentic leadership, providing a clear understanding of the topic.\n\n### Suggestions for Improvement\n\n1. Further Integration with Chapter 1: Ensure that all themes introduced in Chapter 1 are seamlessly continued in Chapter 2. Explicitly link the discussions in Chapter 2 back to the points raised in Chapter 1 to create a cohesive narrative.\n\n2. Clarify Methodology: Provide a brief overview of the methods used to gather and analyze the data mentioned in the chapter. This could include mentioning specific literature review techniques or qualitative analysis methods.\n\n3. Expand on Examples: While the chapter includes significant examples like the Arab Spring and the #MeToo movement, consider adding more detailed case studies to illustrate the points further.\n\n4. Subheadings for Clarity: Use subheadings to organize the content better and improve readability. For instance, sections on political influence, social movements, and economic impact could be clearly delineated.\n\n### Conclusion\n\nOverall, Chapter 2 fits well within the structure and goals of your capstone project as outlined in the provided documents. It effectively continues the discussion from Chapter 1 and adheres to the template's guidelines, making it a strong component of your capstone paper."]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true

This capstone project investigates the transformative role of social media influencers in shaping public opinion and leading societal discussions. In a world where digital platforms like Twitter, Facebook, and Instagram not only dominate but define public discourse, these influencers emerge not merely as entertainers but as pivotal figures in leadership. They wield power capable of initiating significant social changes and influencing political outcomes, positioning themselves as central figures in the ongoing dialogue about leadership in the digital era.\n\n#### Social Significance:\nThe influence of social media is profound and ubiquitous, reaching across all sectors of society. According to Pew Research, approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some type of social media, with varying impacts on social, political, and community engagement (Pew Research Center, 2021). This capstone project investigates the transformative role of social media influencers in shaping public opinion and leading societal discussions. In a world where digital platforms like Twitter, Facebook, and Instagram not only dominate but define public discourse, these influencers emerge not merely as entertainers but as pivotal figures in leadership. They wield power capable of initiating significant social changes and influencing political outcomes, positioning themselves as central figures in the ongoing dialogue about leadership in the digital era.\n\n#### Social Significance:\nThe influence of social media is profound and ubiquitous, reaching across all sectors of society. According to the Pew Research Center, approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some type of social media, with varying impacts on social, political, and community engagement (Pew Research Center, 2021). The breadth of this influence spans across diverse demographic groups, making nearly everyone a potential recipient of communicated messages, whether accurate or misleading.\n\nThe potential benefits of this influence include increased awareness and mobilization for social causes, as seen with movements like #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter, which have propelled significant societal shifts and brought critical issues to the forefront of global awareness. Social media influencers have played crucial roles in these movements, utilizing their platforms to amplify voices and call for action. For instance, prominent figures like Alyssa Milano and Tarana Burke have used their influence to promote the #MeToo movement, leading to widespread discussions about sexual harassment and assault (Mendes, Ringrose, & Keller, 2018).\n\nHowever, the risks involve the spread of misinformation and the manipulation of public opinion, which can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The cost of such influence can be seen in the widespread controversies surrounding elections and public policy debates, where influencers have swayed public sentiment through both genuine and questionable means. For example, during the 2016 U.S. presidential election, false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots was found to have significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017).\n\nThe individuals most impacted by this phenomenon include young adults, who are the most active on platforms like Instagram and TikTok and are particularly susceptible to influencer marketing and political campaigns (Anderson & Jiang, 2021). This demographic's high engagement levels highlight the critical need to understand the mechanisms of influence and leadership within these digital platforms. Research indicates that young people are more likely to trust influencers than traditional celebrities or politicians, making them a key target for both marketing and political messaging (Djafarova & Rushworth, 2017).\n\nIn addition to social movements and political implications, the economic impact of social media influence is significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry, with brands leveraging the reach and authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence, the influencer marketing industry is set to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence, 2021). This economic dimension underscores the dual nature of influencer power: while it offers opportunities for authentic brand engagement, it also raises questions about ethics and transparency in advertising.\n\nThe social significance of social media influence is further highlighted by its role in mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image, particularly among young women. For example, Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction, mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies. These findings suggest that while influencers can promote positive messages, they also have the potential to contribute to harmful social norms.\n\n#### Conclusion:\nThis research project is situated at the intersection of leadership theory and digital media studies. It aims to critically analyze the role of social media influencers as contemporary leaders who not only entertain but also significantly influence societal values and norms. By aligning the characteristics of social media leadership with authentic leadership theories, this study will evaluate the authenticity and ethical considerations of influencers' practices. The findings are expected to provide insights into how digital platforms can be harnessed for responsible and effective leadership, promoting positive change while mitigating risks associated with digital influence. This foundational exploration sets the stage for a detailed literature review in Chapter 2, where theories of leadership and empirical studies on digital influence will be synthesized to build a comprehensive framework for understanding leadership in the digital age.\n\nReferences:\n- Allcott, H., & Gentzkow, M. Here\u2019s a revised version that combines the elements and aligns the paragraph with the end of the introduction, transitioning smoothly to the next chapter:\n\n---\n\nMy fianc\u00e9 is a suspicious person. He does not trust easily and always looks beyond what people say to determine what they mean. Consequently, he is very hard to manipulate and very hard to influence, and as such, he is very hard to lead; he prefers to be in charge. Therefore, he is skilled in convincing people. He knows how to influence others and lead people because, as Northouse (2019) asserts, leadership is an influence process.\n\nUnlike my fianc\u00e9, a significant portion of the population does not delve deeply into the authenticity of the information they receive; 18% of Americans report that social media has a large impact on their voting decisions, and 55% consider it their primary news source, according to a 2019 Pew Research study. This widespread influence of social media raises a compelling question about the nature of leadership in the digital era. Building on Northouse's definition, I intend to argue that the influence exerted by social media can be seen as a form of authentic leadership. This form of leadership, practiced by social media influencers, aligns closely with authentic leadership theory, which emphasizes transparency, ethics, and a focus on the communal good. These influencers, through their pervasive reach and often personal engagement with followers, craft a modern narrative of leadership that significantly shapes public opinions and societal values.\n\nThe influence of social media is profound and ubiquitous, reaching across all sectors of society. According to the Pew Research Center, approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some type of social media, with varying impacts on social, political, and community engagement (Pew Research Center, 2021). The breadth of this influence spans across diverse demographic groups, making nearly everyone a potential recipient of communicated messages, whether accurate or misleading.\n\nThe potential benefits of this influence include increased awareness and mobilization for social causes, as seen with movements like #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter, which have propelled significant societal shifts and brought critical issues to the forefront of global awareness. Social media influencers have played crucial roles in these movements, utilizing their platforms to amplify voices and call for action. For instance, prominent figures like Alyssa Milano and Tarana Burke have used their influence to promote the #MeToo movement, leading to widespread discussions about sexual harassment and assault (Mendes, Ringrose, & Keller, 2018).\n\nHowever, the risks involve the spread of misinformation and the manipulation of public opinion, which can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The cost of such influence can be seen in the widespread controversies surrounding elections and public policy debates, where influencers have swayed public sentiment through both genuine and questionable means. For example, during the 2016 U.S. presidential election, false information disseminated by social media influencers and bots was found to have significantly impacted voter perceptions and behaviors (Allcott & Gentzkow, 2017).\n\nThe individuals most impacted by this phenomenon include young adults, who are the most active on platforms like Instagram and TikTok and are particularly susceptible to influencer marketing and political campaigns (Anderson & Jiang, 2021). This demographic's high engagement levels highlight the critical need to understand the mechanisms of influence and leadership within these digital platforms. Research indicates that young people are more likely to trust influencers than traditional celebrities or politicians, making them a key target for both marketing and political messaging (Djafarova & Rushworth, 2017).\n\nIn addition to social movements and political implications, the economic impact of social media influence is significant. Influencer marketing has become a multi-billion-dollar industry, with brands leveraging the reach and authenticity of influencers to connect with consumers. According to a report by Business Insider Intelligence, the influencer marketing industry is set to grow to approximately $15 billion by 2022 (Business Insider Intelligence, 2021). This economic dimension underscores the dual nature of influencer power: while it offers opportunities for authentic brand engagement, it also raises questions about ethics and transparency in advertising.\n\nThe social significance of social media influence is further highlighted by its role in mental health. Studies have shown that exposure to influencer content can impact self-esteem and body image, particularly among young women. For example, Fardouly et al. (2015) found that Instagram use was associated with greater body dissatisfaction, mediated by the internalization of the thin ideal and appearance comparison tendencies. These findings suggest that while influencers can promote positive messages, they also have the potential to contribute to harmful social norms.\n\nThis research project is situated at the intersection of leadership theory and digital media studies. It aims to critically analyze the role of social media influencers as contemporary leaders who not only entertain but also significantly influence societal values and norms. By aligning the characteristics of social media leadership with authentic leadership theories, this study will evaluate the authenticity and ethical considerations of influencers' practices. The findings are expected to provide insights into how digital platforms can be harnessed for responsible and effective leadership, promoting positive change while mitigating risks associated with digital influence. This foundational exploration sets the stage for a detailed investigation in Chapter 2, where the methodologies and initial hypotheses will be discussed, leading to a comprehensive literature review in Chapter 3.\n\nReferences:\n- Allcott, H., & Gentzkow, M. This process involves more than just obtaining a consent form signature from the participant. Here's a general breakdown:\n\n### 1. IRB Approval Process\n - Expedited Review: Depending on the nature of your study, you might qualify for an expedited review process. This is generally possible if the study involves minimal risk to participants. For example, research involving surveys, educational tests, or interviews can often be expedited.\n - Full Review: More invasive or potentially harmful studies will likely require a full review, which takes more time and involves a detailed assessment by the IRB board.\n\n### 2. Informed Consent\n - Consent Form: The participant must be fully informed about the nature of the study, what their participation involves, the risks and benefits, and their right to withdraw at any time without penalty. The consent form should cover all these aspects and be signed by the participant.\n - Additional Considerations: Depending on the specifics of your research, additional forms or consents may be necessary, such as for the use of any personally identifying information or sensitive data.\n\n### 3. Qualitative Research and Ethical Considerations\n - Textbook Guidance: Qualitative research textbooks generally stress the importance of ethical considerations. This includes ensuring the confidentiality and anonymity of participants, obtaining informed consent, and ensuring that participation is voluntary and based on a full understanding of the research.\n - Data Handling: These sources also often discuss how to handle and store data securely, how to ethically report findings, and the importance of mitigating any potential harm or discomfort to participants.\n\nTo facilitate a rapid IRB process, it's crucial to:\n- Prepare thorough documentation: This includes a clear research proposal, a detailed description of methodology, and all necessary consent forms.\n- Consult with the IRB early: Engaging with your IRB early in the process can help identify any potential issues that could delay approval.\n- Follow guidelines meticulously: Adhering to all guidelines and ethical standards increases the likelihood of an expedited review.\n\nIf you need more detailed information from qualitative analysis textbooks or specific guidelines from an IRB manual, accessing these resources or consulting with an expert in your field or institution's IRB office can provide more tailored guidance."]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true

Here are steps you can follow to ensure your research complies with ethical guidelines:\n\n### 1. Consult Your Advisor or Department\n - Initial Steps: Speak with your capstone advisor or the head of your department about the necessity of IRB approval for your project. They can provide specific guidelines based on the nature of your research and institutional policies.\n\n### 2. IRB Application\n - Exemption or Expedited Review: Given that your study involves only interviews and is with a family member, it may qualify for an exempt or expedited review, especially if it poses minimal risk.\n -

Application Process: You will likely need to submit a description of your project, your interview questions, methods for data collection and analysis, and how you plan to use the information.\n\n### 3. Informed Consent\n - Consent Documentation: Even though the participant is your father, it\u2019s essential he understands the study\u2019s purpose, how his information will be used, and that he consents to this use. This consent should be documented through a signed form.\n - Voluntary Participation: Ensure he knows he can withdraw his participation at any time without any consequences.\n\n### 4. Handling Sensitive Information\n - Anonymity and Confidentiality: Keeping your father's identity anonymous while using his demographic information can be tricky. To maintain anonymity:\n   - Do not use all demographic details if they are specific enough to identify him (like a unique combination of age, occupation, and location).\n   - Use broad categories for demographic information (e.g., age range instead of specific age, general occupation type rather than specific job title).\n - Data Storage and Security: Ensure that any recorded interviews or notes are securely stored and only accessible to authorized individuals involved in your project.\n\n### 5. Ethical Reporting\n- Discretion in Publication: Carefully consider how you present the information in your paper to respect privacy and prevent any possible harm or embarrassment.\n\n### 6. Follow Up\n - IRB Feedback: Be prepared to modify your project based on feedback from the IRB. They might request changes to your consent form, the scope of questions, or how you plan to maintain anonymity.\n\nIt's crucial to follow these steps carefully to uphold ethical standards and ensure the integrity of your research. This process will not only protect your participant but also enhance the credibility of your findings. If you need specific templates or examples of consent forms and IRB applications, these are often available through your university\u2019s IRB website or office."]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true

More specifically, it can fall under several sub-disciplines such as:\n\n1. Sociology: Examining how social media influences social behaviors, norms, and interactions.\n2. Communication Studies: Focusing on the role of social media as a communication tool and its effects on public discourse.\n3. Psychology: Investigating the psychological impacts of social media usage on individuals, including issues like self-esteem, mental health, and identity formation.\n4. Media Studies: Analyzing the content, production, and consumption of social media and its influencers.\n5. Cultural Studies: Exploring how social media shapes and reflects cultural practices and beliefs.\n6. Marketing and Consumer Behavior: Looking at how influencers affect consumer choices and brand perceptions.\n\n### Appropriateness for a Doctoral Thesis\n\nThis topic is indeed appropriate for a doctoral thesis. It is timely, relevant, and offers a wide range of research opportunities. Here are some reasons why it is suitable:\n\n1. Relevance and Contemporary Importance: Social media and influencers are integral parts of modern life, impacting numerous aspects of society from politics to personal relationships.\n\n2. Interdisciplinary Scope: The topic allows for an interdisciplinary approach, integrating methods and theories from sociology, psychology, communication studies, and more.\n\n3. Research Gaps: Despite the proliferation of research on social media, there are still many unexplored areas, particularly in understanding long-term societal impacts and the mechanisms behind influencer effects.\n\n4. Methodological Variety: The topic lends itself to diverse research methodologies, including qualitative methods (e.g., interviews, ethnography), quantitative methods (e.g., surveys, experiments), and mixed methods.\n\n5. Societal Impact: Findings from this research can inform public policy, educational programs, mental health initiatives, and marketing strategies, thereby contributing to societal well-being.\n\n### Potential Research Questions\n\nTo refine the topic for a doctoral thesis, consider focusing on specific aspects or questions, such as:\n\n- How do social media influencers shape public opinion on critical issues?\n- What are the psychological effects of social media consumption on different demographic groups?\n- How does the portrayal of lifestyles by influencers affect consumer behavior and personal aspirations?\n- What role do social media algorithms play in shaping societal norms and values?\n- How do different cultures perceive and interact with social media influencers?\n\nIn summary, the effects of social media and influencers on society is a rich and suitable topic for a doctoral thesis, offering ample opportunities for meaningful and impactful research."]}, doctoral thesis that investigates how social media influencers shape public opinion on critical issues through the lens of leadership and influence processes, you can build upon Peter Northouse's (2019) conceptualization of leadership as an influence process. This approach allows you to explore the parallels between traditional leadership and the influence exerted by social media influencers.\n\n### Conceptual Framework and Thesis Structure\n\n1. Introduction\n - Background and Rationale: Outline the significance of social media and influencers in contemporary society.\n - Research Question: How do social media influencers shape public opinion on critical issues through leadership and influence processes?\n - Objectives: Define the aims of the study, such as understanding the mechanisms of influence, identifying key influencers, and examining their impact on public opinion.\n\n2. Literature Review\n - Leadership as an Influence Process: Discuss Northouse\u2019s (2019) theories on leadership, emphasizing the role of influence in leadership.\n - Social Media and Public Opinion: Review existing research on how social media platforms affect public opinion.\n - Influencers as Leaders: Explore the concept of social media influencers as informal leaders who guide public discourse and behavior.\n - Case Studies and Examples: Include notable examples, such as political influencers like Donald Trump, and how they have shaped public opinion on various issues.\n\n3. Theoretical Framework\n - Northouse\u2019s Leadership Theories: Apply Northouse\u2019s framework to analyze the influence mechanisms of social media influencers.\n - Media Effects Theories: Incorporate theories such as the agenda-setting theory, framing, and the two-step flow of communication to understand how influencers disseminate and shape information.\n

- Social Identity and Social Learning Theories: Use these theories to explain how followers identify with influencers and adopt their viewpoints.\n\n4.

Methodology\n - Research Design: Outline a mixed-methods approach, combining qualitative and quantitative research.\n - Data Collection: Describe methods such as content analysis of influencers' posts, surveys of followers, and interviews with influencers and experts.\n - Data Analysis: Explain how thematic analysis, statistical analysis, and case study analysis will be conducted.\n\n5. Case Studies\n - Political Influence: Examine specific instances where influencers have impacted political opinions or actions (e.g., election campaigns, policy advocacy).\n - Cultural and Social Influence: Investigate how influencers shape cultural norms and social behaviors (e.g., fashion trends, health behaviors).\n - Crisis and Controversy Management: Analyze how influencers manage public opinion during crises or controversies.\n\n6. Findings\n - Mechanisms of Influence: Present findings on how influencers use leadership techniques to shape public opinion.\n - Impact on Public Opinion: Discuss the extent and nature of influencers' impact on various critical issues.\n - Comparative Analysis: Compare different types of influencers (e.g., political, cultural, social) and their respective influence processes.\n\n7. In addition it served as a platform for ordinary people to share their views and reactions during a time of uncertainty and unrest. Most notably TikTok the social media platform where users post short videos lip-singing and dancing rose to prominence.\nHowever throughout this time TikTok and other social media platforms became more than just a means for people to connect and express themselves. It also became the focal point and catalyst to demonstrations across the nation. During this period incendiary and inspirational hashtags such as \u2018#stopthesteal\u2019 and \u2018#sayhername\u2019 took center stage and entered the public vernacular. \nSocial media activism\u2014long looked down upon as lazy and ineffectual\u2014 suddenly became the vehicle activists used to recruit and organize. For example it\u2019s noted that many of the participants of the January 6th 2021 capital insurrection first tweeted or posted videos on Youtube promoting the January 6 demonstration that devolved into a riot (Atlantic Council\u2019s DFRLab 2021). At the time many political pundits argued that the January 6th insurrection occurred because of incendiary statements made both online and in-person by then President Donald Trump (Heilweil & Ghaffary 2021; \u201cTrump Impeached\u201d 2021). Later former President Trump would even be prosecuted impeached and banned from social media platforms for inciting the January 6th riot.\nIt\u2019s clear that social media influences and other online public figures hold tremendous sway over public opinion and attitudes in current times. Today one need never leave home to influence the attitude and practices of the public at large. Thus it begs the question \u2018Has social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 gotten a bad rap?\u2019 Is it possible to start a movement and effect positive change with a couple of keystrokes and a vision?\nI believe the answer to those questions is yes. If I could gather foremost experts on topics relevant to the subject together to discuss it at a cocktail party I feel confident they also would reach the same conclusion. Indeed suppose one were to examine the scope of their research. In that case one might find support for my assertion and further evidence of how social media influence or thought leadership influences and motivates the actions of the public at large.\nFor example my first guest would certainly be Peter Guy Northouse. Northouse\u2019s textbooks on leadership explore various leadership theories and provide several case studies for each application. In his research and writing Northouse (2019) displays a thorough understanding of the mechanics of how different kinds of leaders influence followers thinking and behavior (Northouse 2019 2021). If one wanted to elucidate and compare how the qualities exhibited by social media activists resembled and matched those of other prominent leaders and activists in history Northouse\u2019s research would be the best starting point. One need only delve into the research of Northouse to discover the primary qualities traits and approaches utilized by leaders.\nFor instance Northouse\u2019s 2019 book titled Leadership: theory and practice begins by discussing the dissonance between scholars about the meaning of leadership. Northouse (2019) also explores the history of leadership theory in the modern age. Northouse (2019) then defines leadership as \u201ca process whereby an individual influences a group of individuals to achieve a common goal\u201d (p. 43).\nOf the varied leadership descriptions available Northouse\u2019s definition of leadership aligns most with my thinking philosophy and research. Through all his case studies and descriptions of modern leadership theories and approaches he reveals how one needs only to have influence and lead followers toward a common goal to be a leader. As one may be influenced through many avenues over-simplifying leadership into an influence process allows many people who occupy non-traditional or new societal roles of influence to be considered leaders.\nHowever Northouse (2019) also asserts that \u201cit is the leader who often initiates the relationship creates the communication linkages and carries the burden for maintaining the relationship\u201d (p. 44). This assertion leads me to the second guest of my cocktail party. In order to discuss the mechanisms by which one could gain followers and initiate a meaningful and influential relationship with persons merely through how they present themselves and their ideas it seems that I would need a scholar knowledgeable about authentic leadership theory and practices. Thus my next guest would be author and university lecturer Bas W. Blekkingh.\nIn a book titled Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission Blekkingh (2015) presents a seven-layer model for achieving authenticity. More importantly Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) seven-layer model illustrates how authentic leaders can solve problems and influence others by identifying their own purpose. Moreover Blekkingh (2015) asserts that \u201cAuthentic Leadership amounts to \u2018exerting influence with your mission in mind in a genuine and reliable way\u2019\u201d (p. 149). Blekkingh\u2019s assertions and the subject of his book overall provide an answer to how social media influences may serve as authentic leaders in society and guide others toward a particular philosophy or way of thinking.\nHowever next I would want guests at my cocktail party whose research presented further data to support my claim. This guest\u2019s research would contain prior studies or statistical data collected that reflected the literary body of work of which my research would be an addition. Consequently the next guest invited to my hypothetical cocktail party would be an Instructor at Grant MacEwan College and the University of Alberta Shelly Boulianne.\nBoulianne\u2019s (2009) research titled \u201cDoes Internet Use Affect Engagement? A MetaAnalysis of Research\u201d initially published in the Political Communication journal meets these criteria perfectly. Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis of 38 studies examining the correlation between internet use and political engagement provides concrete evidence of the role of the internet in political engagement. Boulianne (2009) asserted there was \u201crelatively little research on the relationship between Internet use and political engagement\u201d at publication (p. 295). However Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis bridged a gap in the literature and was able to show on an aggregate level the positive effect of internet use on civic engagement. Boulianne (2009) concluded that:\nIn this analysis of 38 studies and 166 effects testing the relationship between Internet use and political engagement the meta-data establish that there is little evidence to support the argument that Internet use is contributing to civic decline. The findings suggest that the effect of Internet use on engagement is positive. (p. 205)\nBoulianne\u2019s (2009) data and research serve as an essential link proving the potential for social media activism to affect public opinion and behavior. \n\tFinally the last guest I would invite to round out the discussion of whether social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 can result in positive social change is Henrik S. Christensen. As a scholar published author and doctoral candidate at the Department of Political Science at \u00c5bo Akademi University in Turku Finland Christensen\u2019s (2011) article offers a valued perspective on slactivism. In addition the author\u2019s research is relevant to my topic and represents part of the body of literature I would hope one day includes my research. \n\tIn a 2011 article titled \u201cPolitical activities on the Internet: Slacktivism or political participation by other means?\u201d initially published in the online academic journal First Monday Christensen (2011) discusses the societal implications of online activism and political engagement. Christensen (2011) cites and summarizes prior research devoted to the topic to reach a conclusion and answer the problem statement expressed in his introduction. In the article Christensen (2011) concludes that \u201ceven if it is not possible to dismiss the skepticism about the effectiveness of online participation it is premature to dismiss the impact of the Internet on political activism altogether\u201d (para. 60).\n\t Christensen\u2019s article explored prior research studies and presented data that either supported or challenged his idea. Christensen\u2019s article also reflected on and analyzed the arguments presented by other scholars to explain current societal behaviors. Thus in addition to Christensen\u2019s (2011) article being significantly relevant to my research topic it also represents an example of the kind of research product I wish my capstone project to be.\nMoreover each of my chosen cocktail party guest\u2019s work reflects on or further develops a particular aspect of the mechanics and significance of social media activism. Therefore I will likely refer to and cite their work in my capstone project. At the completion of my capstone project I hope that through exploring the research of others and extracting data about public opinion I will have proved the significance of online activism. In addition there is a gap in the literature that describes the role of authentic leadership in social media influence. Therefore my capstone project would prove and explain how one can affect positive change by living authentically and sharing your ideas or concerns online. \nIn modern society a tweet isn\u2019t just a tweet. In today\u2019s world interspersed between fun dancing and lip-syncing videos real issues affecting the community at large are being addressed. On TikTok people raise concerns comment on social issues and invite humanity to change for the better. The pandemic and other recent events have spotlighted how online activism can affect and direct offline public action. Going forward it is virtually indisputable that social media personalities and influencers have a tremendous platform that they can use to shape public perception of events and start a movement. By raising awareness of the significance of online influence I hope that people will take online platforms seriously and be cautious not to promote ideas and actions detrimental to society.\nReferences\nAtlantic Council\u2019s DFRLab. While Milano was not the originator of the phrase coined by activist Tarana Burke in 2006 Milano\u2019s tweet to her then three million-plus subscribers garnered thousands of responses overnight (Thomson 2018). Suddenly women who had suffered in silence\u2014sometimes even for years\u2014suddenly began to speak out about their experiences. Other victims bolstered and emboldened by what was becoming a culture of accountability for sexual harassment and assault perpetrators began to seize personal agency and confront their tormentors through official channels. \nThus what began as a mere tweet became a model for social media activism in the current age. Although the pandemic has affected society\u2019s primary modes of communication in past times social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 was looked down upon as lazy and ineffectual (Thomson 2018). However recent events such as the #MeToo movement might prompt one to reexamine long-held opinions on the topic. As more and more significant events driven by online activities occur one might question: Has slacktivism gotten a bad rap? Do we underestimate the leadership power of online influencers? Is social media influence an example of authentic leadership?\nAside from the #MeToo movement social media has been the purview and catalytic agent in many other social and political activities. For example many see organizer Alicia Garza\u2019s 2013 Facebook post containing the phrase \u2018black lives matter\u2019 as well as her friend and fellow organizer Patrisse Cullors\u2019 subsequently sharing that post with the hashtag #BlackLivesMatter as a pivotal moment in the modern civil rights movement era (Guynn 2015). Moreover even before the #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter movements Facebook was largely credited as a critical element in the 2011 Egyptian revolution (Vargas 2012).\nAdditionally corporations and other organizations have long acknowledged the impact of social media influencers and other online personalities on the general populace. Consequently many businesses and non-profit organizations partner with social-media influences to market their products or causes utilizing the power notoriety or fame of these social media figures (Anderson 2020). However although it is acknowledged that social media personalities have a tremendous platform that lends them a large audience to influence and share ideas with there is little research about the leadership function they fill in society.

\nAccording to a 2021 Pew Research Center survey approximately seven in ten Americans use social media (Auxier & Anderson 2021). In addition 81% of survey participants report using the social media platform Youtube and 69% say they use Facebook (Pew Research Center 2021). While the data indicates that Americans utilize and engage with Social Media platforms it is still unclear to what degree social media influencers lead and affect the attitudes of the general populace. With the growing popularity and impact of social media use it\u2019s vital to gain a deeper perspective on the depth of influence social media platforms have to harness that power for good.\nA phenomenological study into the leadership role of social media influencers in modern society could illuminate the extent to which they guide societal attitudes and opinions. According to Tracy (2019) \u201cPhenomenology is the reflective study of pre\u2010reflective experience concerned with how people consciously experience specific phenomena things or stuff. Similar to grounded theory phenomenology does not specify or closely delineate what it expects to find in the study (p. 65). Accordingly this research will explore the relationship between online influence and authentic leadership utilizing an emic methodology where \u201cbehavior is described from the actor\u2019s point of view and is context\u2010specific\u201d (p. 26). However the primary purpose or goal of the phenomenological study will be to examine the significance and impact of social media personalities as authentic and thought leaders across various social media user age groups.\nAccording to Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) an emergent research design infers that the initial plan is fluid and that \u201csome or all phases of the process may change or shift after the researcher enters the field and begins to collect data\u2026the questions may change the forms of data collection may shift and the individuals studied may be modified (p. 259). Likewise the methodologies used during the research project may change. Moreover Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) advise that \u2018the idea behind qualitative research is to purposefully select participants or sites (or documents or visual material) that will best help the researcher understand the problem and the research question\u201d (p. 262). Hence I plan to gather data through three sources or data gathering methodologies.\nFirst I plan to curate a group of approximately four interview subjects. The subjects will represent four age ranges the Pew research survey data focuses on to correlate my findings better. I will also interview at least one social media personality with a significant following of 100000 users or more. In addition I will prepare a release form and gain the consent of all participants to use their personal details or for their varying levels of participation i.e. video audio recordings political affiliations etc. \nNext I will use the data from several annual Pew Research Center surveys on the social media platform use of adults in America. While I had considered preparing my own survey the data I wish to examine already exists and such an action would not be an efficient use of my time and efforts. In addition there are also several Gallup polls whose raw data I plan to use in research pursuits.\nAccording to Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) one category of qualitative data consists of \u201cqualitative audiovisual and digital materials (including social media materials). This data may take the form of photographs art objects videotapes website main pages e-mails text messages social media text or any forms of sound\u201d (p. 267). Thus I will also explore social-media platforms such as TikTok Youtube Reddit etc. to observe and examine whether social-media influencers actively engage in the behaviors that model or align with authentic leadership theory principles. My observations will likely inform the interview questions I prepare for study participants. \nMoreover Tracy (2019) asserts that fieldwork or participant witnessing \u201callows researchers to examine participants\u2019 actions as a means to understanding their values\u201d (p. 78). Exploring audio-visual and written materials on social media platforms like Twitter TikTok and Facebook are most akin to \u2018fieldwork\u2019 in the context of this project. Thus the observations or \u2018participant witnessing\u2019 that I engage in will help me discern the values and in turn the participants\u2019 authenticity and leadership or followership qualities.\nTo paint a clear picture of the relationship between social media influence and authentic leadership I would first review the written works of several writers and scholars in the field of authentic leadership. For example Peter G. Northouse is a Western Michigan University professor and writer of several books on leadership (Northouse 2019). Northouse\u2019s (2019) book titled Leadership: theory and practice begins by defining leadership. Northouse (2019) asserts that \u201cLeadership is a process whereby an individual influences a group of individuals to achieve a common goal\u201d (p. 43). Northouse (2019) then explores the history of leadership theory from the early 20th century onward. Each chapter onward then discusses a particular leadership theory or approach. \nIn chapter 9 Northouse (2019) gives an in-depth description of authentic leadership. He begins by claiming that:\nAuthentic leadership represents one of the newer areas of leadership research. It focuses on whether leadership is genuine and \u201creal.\u201d As the title of this approach implies authentic leadership is about the authenticity of leaders and their leadership\u2026 authentic leadership is still in the formative phase of development. As a result authentic leadership needs to be considered more tentatively: It is likely to change as new research about the theory is published (p. 308).\nNorthouse (2019) also describes the origins of authentic leadership and offers a rationale for its emerging popularity. However as asserted by Northouse authentic leadership theory is in its nascent stages so its application is not as readily recognizable. Even so Northouse (2019) clarifies and defines authentic leadership and its approaches within the chapter. Additionally Northouse also acknowledges the need for further research into authentic leadership theory. Therefore Northouse\u2019s general framework will be a helpful resource while studying the relationship between social media influence and authentic leadership.\nBlekkingh\u2019s (2015) and Wulffers\u2019 (2017) writing also provide insight into authentic leadership practices. For instance Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) book Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission explores authentic leadership practices while providing a guiding framework towards discovering one\u2019s purpose and achieving authenticity. In comparison while also equally relevant Wulffers\u2019 (2017) book titled Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching Approach provided critical insight into the mechanisms of authentic leadership while contending that authenticity is a spectrum. Wulffers\u2019 (2017) book is particularly pertinent as the writer examines the methodologies and components of authentic leadership development while also showing ample examples of authentic leaders in the public sphere.\nAfter using prior literature to shape the narrative and define my concept of authentic leadership I would also like to review the work of other scholars examining the effects of the internet and social media use in the modern age. For example Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis of prior studies done examining the relationship between internet use and political engagement is an ideal starting point to chart the trajectory of the effects of society\u2019s burgeoning social media use. In addition Boulianne (2009) concluded that \u201cthe meta-data establish that there is little evidence to support the argument that Internet use is contributing to civic decline. The findings suggest that the effect of Internet use on engagement is positive\u201d (p. 205). Booulianne\u2019s (2009) analysis shows a clear relationship between online and offline engagement. Hence one could use Bouliane\u2019s research as a provocation to learn more about the specific relationship between social media use and influence.\nHowever internet and social media use and online activism are not synonymous. Thus Christensen\u2019s (2011) article titled \u201cPolitical activities on the Internet: Slacktivism or political participation by other means?\u201d discussing the implications of and incentives to engaging in online activism give a critical alternate perspective on the question of whether social media personalities practice authentic leadership. Throughout the article Christensen (2011) synthesized and examined prior research for and against his central hypothesis. Christensen\u2019s (2011) conclusion that online activities promote offline participation suggests that online influence has a more significant effect on offline behavior than many studies have shown. Ultimately Christensen\u2019s article contextualizes the data from previous research referenced in ways that facilitate further analysis based on the article\u2019s premises and its references. \nFinally Anderson and Auxier\u2019s (2021) online article for the Pew Research Center website about social media use provides a starting point for the survey\u2019s data analysis. The article titled \u201cSocial Media Use in 2021\u201d summarizes the results of Pew Research Center\u2019s annual survey on American social media use. In the article Anderson and Auxier (2021) present the survey results to support their conclusions drawn from the survey data. However as Anderson and Auxier do not use the data to support claims of either causation or correlation their findings function more as commentary to the data presented. The article\u2019s central idea is \u201ca majority of Americans say they use YouTube and Facebook while use of Instagram Snapchat and TikTok is especially common among adults under 30\u201d (Anderson & Auxier 2021 para. 1). In the scope of my research the article primarily functions as a prompt to further examine the data and determine correlation or causation through my own findings.\nUltimately my reflexivity influences and informs this research project. I am an avid user of social media across multiple platforms. I am aware that I am open to the influence of social media personalities and thus am likely to modify some aspects of my life based on their recommendation. More importantly I have on multiple occasions changed my attitude toward a particular concept idea or even a political candidate and ideology because of views and opinions expressed by social media personalities. \nMoreover I do not think that I am in the minority. Most social media users are also influenced by what they read hear and see. Nonetheless regardless of what I may anticipate finding I am eager to research this topic to discover the thoughts and opinions of others and learn how they experience social media activism and engagement. \nHowever it seems to me that scholars have largely ignored the impact power influence and leadership abilities of social media creators to mobilize large groups of people towards a common goal. I feel passionate that it is essential to learn understand and raise awareness of the significance of social media content creators in shaping public attitudes and behaviors. I hope that my research could inspire scholars and educators to take social media platforms more seriously and reflect on what ideas they choose to convey and prompt further research into this area.\n\nReferences\nAnderson C. He examines and critiques common approaches and ideas held in the academic community regarding authentic leadership theory. The author goes on to summarize and discuss current approaches to authentic leadership development. Berkovich (2010) identifies and discusses the central focus \u2018narrative identity processing\u2019 and \u2018dramaturgical enactment\u2019 of two of the foremost didactic methods for authentic leadership development. He then suggests a new perspective based in dialogical philosophy and sets about describing a proposed framework for dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership. Berkovich (2010) identifies eight areas of dialogical pedagogy which are useful in authentic leadership development: care contact critical thinking empathy mutuality open-mindedness respect and self-exposure. Finally the article evaluates and critiques the use and outcomes of using dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership development initiatives.\n\tThe source was useful in that the author first defined his view of the current perspectives in authentic leadership before exploring a new perspective. The author discusses the foundations and mechanics of dialogical pedagogy in an in-depth manner which is helpful in understanding the overall purpose and ideas set forth in the article. Blekkingh (2015) approaches his topic through a seven layer model which he postulates is the framework of all human beings. These seven layers in chapter discussion order are: environment behavior skills norms ego values and authenticity. The initial seven chapters are each focused on one of these layers and the problems associated with each layer. Blekkingh (2015) suggests that through this layered self reflection one is enabled to find their authentic self and their purpose. He presents the idea that this once an individual is aware of their authentic self and purpose they will be able to \u201cput Authentic Leadership into effect\u201d (Blekkingh 2015 p. x). Finally he concludes the book with resources for further exploration and includes a lengthy appendix that functions as kind of encyclopedia with supplemental materials.\n\tThe author is a credible source in the field of authentic leadership theory due to his work as both an authentic leadership lecturer at a Dutch university and as one of the founders of a consultancy firm centered around the tenets of authentic leadership. One failing of the book as Authentic Leadership resource is that many of the examples in the book are mainly anecdotal and lack an academic or scientific robustness. In contrast the authors simple language and engaging exercises make his ideas and pedagogy easily understood and applicable to anyone.\nGardner W. L. Avolio B. J. Luthans F. May D. R. & Walumbwa F. (2005) contend that \u201cthe purpose of this article is to further develop and extend an emerging theory of authentic leadership development\u201d (p. 344). The authors begin by defining their interpretation of the constructs of authenticity authentic leadership and authentic followership. Gardner et al (2005) then discuss a conceptual authentic leadership framework for leader and follower development. Gardner et al (2005) propose what they describe as a \u201cself-based model of the developmental processes for authentic leadership and followership\u201d (p. 348). This model sets forth the idea that a leader\u2019s personal history is the catalyst for authentic leadership development (Gardner et al. 2005). The authors identify self-awareness and self-regulation as two fundamental components of authentic leadership development and they discuss both these concepts in depth. Also at the heart of this article is the idea that authentic leaders are positive role models for followers and consistently model authentic behavior balanced processing self-awareness and transparency.\n\tThis article is a valuable resource in examining authentic leadership theory because it examines authentic leadership development using a reflective perspective which looks at the roles of both the leader and follower. The authors also clearly and succinctly define the various components of their authentic leadership model. One area for critique is that the authors don\u2019t provide any concrete examples of the outcomes they predict making the subject matter of the article entirely theoretical. \nHsieh C.-C. & Wang D.-S. The study focuses on the influence of authentic leadership on employee trust and engagement from a supervisor-employee perspective. Hsieh & Wang (2015) made four distinct hypothesis concerning employee and supervisor perceptions of authentic leadership and its mediatory relationship with employee trust and engagement. The study sample was taken from the responses of 77 supervisors and 345 employees from 36 of Taiwan\u2019s best performing companies (Hsieh & Wang 2015). The results of the study were quantified using study participants questionnaire responses which were then converted to statistical data and applied to a hierarchical linear model. Using this data the authors were able to conclude that \u201csupervisor-perceived authentic leadership has a fully mediating influence on employee work engagement through employee trust\u201d (Hsieh & Wang 2015 p. 2341).\n\tThis study is a valuable resource for authentic leadership theory because of its use of statistical data. The presentation of quantifiable results gives greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions. development in the context of the nursing profession. Kerfoot (2006) presents the idea that leader authenticity cannot be self-defined it lies only in the perception of followers. The author also suggests that authenticity may be a character trait but then postulates that through mentoring and confidence one can create the perception of authenticity as a leader (Kerfoot 2006).\n\tThis composition clearly defines the author\u2019s idea of authentic leadership and its importance. While the article does state several arguable conjectures they are all supported by the cited references from other credible sources. This article is relevant and helpful to any authentic leadership research in that it gives context to\u2014and an application of\u2014authentic leadership theory in a specific profession.\nMehmood Q. Hamstra M. R. W. Nawab S. & Vriend T. (2016). Authentic leadership and followers\u2019 \tin-role and extra-role performance: The mediating role of followers\u2019 learning goal orientation. \tJournal of Occupational & Organizational Psychology 89(4) 877\u2013883. Business Source Elite. \t <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=119180634&site=ehost-live\nThis article presents the findings of a research study concerning authentic leadership. Specifically the study examined the role of authentic leadership on employees developmental goals and the correlation between supervisor authentic leadership and employee performance (Mehmood et al. 2016). The authors put forth three distinct hypothesis which predict that authentic leadership positively predicts followers learning goal orientation and indirectly positively predicts followers performance and engagement. The study sample of participants included 115 supervisors and 345 employees in the Pakistani Telecommunications sector (Mehmood et al. 2016). Similar to the study conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) a questionnaire and statistical data was used to quantify the results. Mehmood et al. (2016) were able to conclude there is \u201cevidence that authentic leadership predicts followers' in\u2010role performance and civic virtue extra\u2010role performance through followers' LGO\u201d (p. 882).\n\tThis article is a credible source due to being published as part of peer-reviewed scholarly journal. Additionally the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors conclusions. One criticism of this source is that it does not discuss much of the research that the authors conducted in authentic leadership theory before they arrived at their hypothesis. The authors site an extensive list of credible sources from which they formulated their ideas but it may have been helpful for them to be more in-depth. \nQian J. Yang F. & Han Z. R. (2016). The Influencing Mechanisms of Authentic Leadership on \tFeedback-Seeking Behaviour: A Cognitive/Emotive Model. Current Psychology\u202f: A Journal for \tDiverse Perspectives on Diverse Psychological Issues 35(3) 478\u2013485. WorldCat.org. \t <LINK> https://doi.org/10.1007/s12144-015-9316-z\nThe article suggests that a key influencing mechanism on feedback-seeking behavior in the leader-follower dyadic relationship is through followers cognitive and emotive processes. This composition describes how authentic leadership and employees\u2019 cognitive and emotive perspectives influence feedback-seeking behaviors. Qian et al. (2016) argue \u201cthat authentic leadership influences feedback seeking indirectly through employees\u2019 perceptions about value and cost\u201d (p.4 82). They also put forth a model where authentic leadership correlates with employee positive emotions thereby indirectly fostering feedback-seeking behavior (Qian et al. 2016).\n\tThe article provides a focused view of authentic leadership and how it correlates with feedback-seeking behaviors. The authors cite an extensive amount of credible sources and literature to support their claims but at times this may cause a reader to get the sense that they\u2019re not putting forth any new ideas. One criticism of the composition is that due to its focused view some portions of the article seem almost redundant.\nRego A. Vit\u00f3ria A. Magalh\u00e3es A. Ribeiro N. & e Cunha M. P. (2013). Are authentic leaders \tassociated with more virtuous committed and potent teams? The Leadership Quarterly 24(1) \t61\u201379. <LINK> https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2012.08.002\nThis peer-reviewed article concerns a study which examines how authentic leadership predicts team potency both directly and indirectly. Rego et al. (2013) suggests that authentic leadership alone \u201cis not sufficient to achieve positive team outcomes\u201d (p. 62). The authors assert that team affective commitment and team virtuousness may also be a link between authentic leadership and team potency. Therefore the study also explores the mediatory role of team affective commitment and virtuousness. The study was conducted at a Portuguese university with 59 teams of sizes ranging from 4-21 members. Similar to the study conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) as well as Mehmood et al. (2016) a questionnaire and statistical data was used to quantify the results. Rogo et al. (2013) were able to conclude that \u201cthe findings suggest that AL [authentic leadership] predicts team potency via the mediating role of team virtuousness and team affective commitment\u201d (p. 75).\n\tMany of the studies which concern themselves with the effects of authentic leadership focus on individual follower outcomes. This study is rare in that is examines the effects of authentic leadership on group outcomes. This rarity makes it an exceptional resource for authentic leadership theory research. The authors described the concepts of authentic leadership which lead to their hypothesis in detail which provided ample supplementary information on their study topic. As with the studies conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) as well as Mehmood et al. (2016) the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors conclusions. \nShapira-Lishchinsky O. (2014). Toward developing authentic leadership: Team-based simulations. \tJournal of School Leadership 24(5) 979+. Gale Academic OneFile. <LINK> https://link-gale-\tcom.claremontlincoln.idm.oclc.org/apps/doc/A424532388/AONE\tu=clar94421&sid=bookmark-AONE&xid=f96c90b3\nThis peer-reviewed article concerns a study conducted \u201cto identify whether principal trainees can develop authentic leadership through processing decisions that they or their peers made in TBSs [team based simulations] of ethical cases that they or their peers had experienced\u201d (Shapira-Lishchinsky 2014 p. 987) in the educational field. The study found that there were 2 main advantages of TBSs: TBSs create a supportive environment to learn from participant mistakes and TBSs heightened educational leader awareness of their caring responsibilities. Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014) was able to conclude that TBSs provide a framework for ethical discussion but did not ever establish a firm correlation between authentic leadership development in educational leaders and TBSs.\n\tAlthough this study is peer reviewed its results were not presented in the form of quantifiable data. While the study did include detailed research relating to authentic leadership and also clearly stated its methodology ultimately it is not the best resource for the study of authentic leadership theory. It does however provide ample information and examples which could be correlated with authentic leadership theory through conjecture and deduction.\nWulffers T. (2017). Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching \tApproach. KR Publishing; eBook Collection (EBSCOhost). \t <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=1595178&site=ehost-live\nWullffers (2017) begins by commenting on the state of leadership today and also examining the consequences of poor leadership. The author cites authentic leadership theory as a key method for achieving a better quality of leadership. Wullffers (2017) states that \u201cauthentic leaders are leaders who know who they are and who are true to themselves\u201d (p. 7). The book examines what authentic leadership is from a scholarly perspective and cites multiple literary works concerning the mechanisms of authentic leadership. The author then examines the components and methodologies of authentic leadership development. Wullffers (2017) describes leader authenticity as a spectrum with \u201cleadership development levels of maturity that shape the moral and cognitive capacities\u201d (p. 57) of leaders. The author then goes on to discuss how leaders may navigate up developmental levels. Finally Wulffers (2017) examines well known leaders through the lens of authentic leadership (p. 208).\n\tWhile the author does make some assertions this book functions mainly as an extended case study and detailed manual on how to achieve leader authenticity. The author heavily references previous literature on authentic leadership theory as well as her own experiences to formulate her ideas. The book includes several appendices and end-notes which enhance its usefulness in authentic leadership theory research. Wullffers is also lent a greater credibility through endorsements and reviews by industry leaders.\n\n\n\n\t\n\n\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2005.03.001""]\n[URL: "direct=true&db=bsh&AN=96695857&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: "direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=987184&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=17426678&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=108302656&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=108302656&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: "live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=119180634&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1007/s12144-015-9316-z""]\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2012.08.002""]\n[URL: """"]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=1595178&site=ehost-live""]\nThe file is too long and its contents have been truncated.\n", "title": "annotated bib LL-1.docx", "tether_id": null}, "status": "finished_successfully", "end_turn": null, "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"command": "context_stuff", "is_visually_hidden_from_conversation": true, "message_type": null, "model_slug": "gpt-4", "default_model_slug": "gpt-4", "parent_id": "973f4407-d5f8-4afb-a2f6-e961b2ca1ce9", "request_id": "8a0a39cbe8a85252-MXP", "timestamp_": "absolute"}, "recipient": "all", "channel": null}, "parent": "973f4407-d5f8-4afb-a2f6-e961b2ca1ce9", "children": ["c95bcb16-5fb4-466f-bd5d-df873b6f3fd3"]}, "c95bcb16-5fb4-466f-bd5d-df873b6f3fd3": {"id": "c95bcb16-5fb4-466f-bd5d-df873b6f3fd3", "message": {"id": "c95bcb16-5fb4-466f-bd5d-df873b6f3fd3", "author": {"role": "tool", "name": "myfiles_browser", "metadata": {}}, "create_time":

The proposal to explore social media influencers as leaders and their impact on public opinion, especially in the context of elections, is insightful. It aligns well with existing research on the influence of digital platforms on societal and political behaviors.\n\nYour idea to limit the research to conducting case study interviews is a viable approach, particularly for exploring the nuanced views and strategies of individuals. Case studies, especially those based on interviews, can provide deep insights into the subjective experiences and opinions of social media influencers and their audiences. This method allows for an in-depth understanding of the complex dynamics of influence and leadership in the digital age. Here's how this method aligns with your research:\n\n1. Depth of Insight: Interviews can capture the complexities and subtleties of how influencers perceive their role and influence, which may not be apparent through other methods like surveys or observational studies.\n\n2. Contextual Understanding: This method allows you to gather contextual data about the influencers' intentions, strategies, and perceptions of their impact, which is crucial for analyzing leadership dynamics.\n\n3. Flexibility: Case studies are adaptable and can explore emerging themes in detail, which is particularly useful given the rapidly evolving nature of social media trends and their impact on public opinion.\n\nHowever, you might consider complementing these interviews with additional methods to strengthen your findings and address potential biases:\n- Content Analysis: Analyzing the content created by these influencers could provide quantitative support to the qualitative data gathered through interviews, helping to validate the influencers' claims about their impact and strategies.\n- Surveys of Followers: To gauge the effectiveness of influencer strategies and their perceived authenticity and leadership by the audience, surveys can provide statistical data to back up case study findings.\n\nCombining these methods can provide a more comprehensive view of the influence process, enhancing the reliability and depth of your research. In addition it served as a platform for ordinary people to share their views and reactions during a time of uncertainty and unrest. Most notably TikTok the social media platform where users post short videos lip-singing and dancing rose to prominence.\nHowever throughout this time TikTok and other social media platforms became more than just a means for people to connect and express themselves. It also became the focal point and catalyst to demonstrations across the nation. During this period incendiary and inspirational hashtags such as \u2018#stopthesteal\u2019 and \u2018#sayhername\u2019 took center stage and entered the public vernacular. \nSocial media activism\u2014long looked down upon as lazy and ineffectual\u2014 suddenly became the vehicle activists used to recruit and organize. For example it\u2019s noted that many of the participants of the January 6th 2021 capital insurrection first tweeted or posted videos on Youtube promoting the January 6 demonstration that devolved into a riot (Atlantic Council\u2019s DFRLab 2021). At the time many political pundits argued that the January 6th insurrection occurred because of incendiary statements made both online and in-person by then President Donald Trump (Heilweil & Ghaffary 2021; \u201cTrump Impeached\u201d 2021). Later former President Trump would even be prosecuted impeached and banned from social media platforms for inciting the January 6th riot.\nIt\u2019s clear that social media influences and other online public figures hold tremendous sway over public opinion and attitudes in current times. Today one need never leave home to influence the attitude and practices of the public at large. Thus it begs the question \u2018Has social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 gotten a bad rap?\u2019 Is it possible to start a movement and effect positive change with a couple of keystrokes and a vision?\nI believe the answer to those questions is yes. If I could gather foremost experts on topics relevant to the subject together to discuss it at a cocktail party I feel confident they also would reach the same conclusion. Indeed suppose one were to examine the scope of their research. In that case one might find support for my assertion and further evidence of how social media influence or thought leadership influences and motivates the actions of the public at large.\nFor example my first guest would certainly be Peter Guy Northouse. Northouse\u2019s textbooks on leadership explore various leadership theories and provide several case studies for each application. In his research and writing Northouse (2019) displays a thorough understanding of the mechanics of how different kinds of leaders influence followers thinking and behavior (Northouse 2019 2021). If one wanted to elucidate and compare how the qualities exhibited by social media activists resembled and matched those of other prominent leaders and activists in history Northouse\u2019s research would be the best starting point. One need only delve into the research of Northouse to discover the primary qualities traits and approaches utilized by leaders.\nFor instance Northouse\u2019s 2019 book titled Leadership: theory and practice begins by discussing the dissonance between scholars about the meaning of leadership. Northouse (2019) also explores the history of leadership theory in the modern age. Northouse (2019) then defines leadership as \u201ca process whereby an individual influences a group of individuals to achieve a common goal\u201d (p. 43).\nOf the varied leadership descriptions available Northouse\u2019s definition of leadership aligns most with my thinking philosophy and research. Through all his case studies and descriptions of modern leadership theories and approaches he reveals how one needs only to have influence and lead followers toward a common goal to be a leader. As one may be influenced through many avenues over-simplifying leadership into an influence process allows many people who occupy non-traditional or new societal roles of influence to be considered leaders.\nHowever Northouse (2019) also asserts that \u201cit is the leader who often initiates the relationship creates the communication linkages and carries the burden for maintaining the relationship\u201d (p. 44). This assertion leads me to the second guest of my cocktail party. In order to discuss the mechanisms by which one could gain followers and initiate a meaningful and influential relationship with persons merely through how they present themselves and their ideas it seems that I would need a scholar knowledgeable about authentic leadership theory and practices. Thus my next guest would be author and university lecturer Bas W. Blekkingh.\nIn a book titled Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission Blekkingh (2015) presents a seven-layer model for achieving authenticity. More importantly Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) seven-layer model illustrates how authentic leaders can solve problems and influence others by identifying their own purpose. Moreover Blekkingh (2015) asserts that \u201cAuthentic Leadership amounts to \u2018exerting influence with your mission in mind in a genuine and reliable way\u2019\u201d (p. 149). Blekkingh\u2019s assertions and the subject of his book overall provide an answer to how social media influences may serve as authentic leaders in society and guide others toward a particular philosophy or way of thinking.\nHowever next I would want guests at my cocktail party whose research presented further data to support my claim. This guest\u2019s research would contain prior studies or statistical data collected that reflected the literary body of work of which my research would be an addition. Consequently the next guest invited to my hypothetical cocktail party would be an Instructor at Grant MacEwan College and the University of Alberta Shelly Boulianne.\nBoulianne\u2019s (2009) research titled \u201cDoes Internet Use Affect Engagement? A MetaAnalysis of Research\u201d initially published in the Political Communication journal meets these criteria perfectly. Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis of 38 studies examining the correlation between internet use and political engagement provides concrete evidence of the role of the internet in political engagement. Boulianne (2009) asserted there was \u201crelatively little research on the relationship between Internet use and political engagement\u201d at publication (p. 295). However Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis bridged a gap in the literature and was able to show on an aggregate level the positive effect of internet use on civic engagement. Boulianne (2009) concluded that:\nIn this analysis of 38 studies and 166 effects testing the relationship between Internet use and political engagement the meta-data establish that there is little evidence to support the argument that Internet use is contributing to civic decline. The findings suggest that the effect of Internet use on engagement is positive. (p. 205)\nBoulianne\u2019s (2009) data and research serve as an essential link proving the potential for social media activism to affect public opinion and behavior. \n\tFinally the last guest I would invite to round out the discussion of whether social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 can result in positive social change is Henrik S. Christensen. As a scholar published author and doctoral candidate at the Department of Political Science at \u00c5bo Akademi University in Turku Finland Christensen\u2019s (2011) article offers a valued perspective on slactivism. In addition the author\u2019s research is relevant to my topic and represents part of the body of literature I would hope one day includes my research. \n\tIn a 2011 article titled \u201cPolitical activities on the Internet: Slacktivism or political participation by other means?\u201d initially published in the online academic journal First Monday Christensen (2011) discusses the societal implications of online activism and political engagement. Christensen (2011) cites and summarizes prior research devoted to the topic to reach a conclusion and answer the problem statement expressed in his introduction. In the article Christensen (2011) concludes that \u201ceven if it is not possible to dismiss the skepticism about the effectiveness of online participation it is premature to dismiss the impact of the Internet on political activism altogether\u201d (para. 60).\n\t Christensen\u2019s article explored prior research studies and presented data that either supported or challenged his idea. Christensen\u2019s article also reflected on and analyzed the arguments presented by other scholars to explain current societal behaviors. Thus in addition to Christensen\u2019s (2011) article being significantly relevant to my research topic it also represents an example of the kind of research product I wish my capstone project to be.\nMoreover each of my chosen cocktail party guest\u2019s work reflects on or further develops a particular aspect of the mechanics and significance of social media activism. Therefore I will likely refer to and cite their work in my capstone project. At the completion of my capstone project I hope that through exploring the research of others and extracting data about public opinion I will have proved the significance of online activism. In addition there is a gap in the literature that describes the role of authentic leadership in social media influence. Therefore my capstone project would prove and explain how one can affect positive change by living authentically and sharing your ideas or concerns online. \nIn modern society a tweet isn\u2019t just a tweet. In today\u2019s world interspersed between fun dancing and lip-syncing videos real issues affecting the community at large are being addressed. On TikTok people raise concerns comment on social issues and invite humanity to change for the better. The pandemic and other recent events have spotlighted how online activism can affect and direct offline public action. Going forward it is virtually indisputable that social media personalities and influencers have a tremendous platform that they can use to shape public perception of events and start a movement. By raising awareness of the significance of online influence I hope that people will take online platforms seriously and be cautious not to promote ideas and actions detrimental to society.\nReferences\nAtlantic Council\u2019s DFRLab. While Milano was not the originator of the phrase coined by activist Tarana Burke in 2006 Milano\u2019s tweet to her then three million-plus subscribers garnered thousands of responses overnight (Thomson 2018). Suddenly women who had suffered in silence\u2014sometimes even for years\u2014suddenly began to speak out about their experiences. Other victims bolstered and emboldened by what was becoming a culture of accountability for sexual harassment and assault perpetrators began to seize personal agency and confront their tormentors through official channels. \nThus what began as a mere tweet became a model for social media activism in the current age. Although the pandemic has affected society\u2019s primary modes of communication in past times social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 was looked down upon as lazy and ineffectual (Thomson 2018). However recent events such as the #MeToo movement might prompt one to reexamine long-held opinions on the topic. As more and more significant events driven by online activities occur one might question: Has slacktivism gotten a bad rap? Do we underestimate the leadership power of online influencers? Is social media influence an example of authentic leadership?\nAside from the #MeToo movement social media has been the purview and catalytic agent in many other social and political activities. For example many see organizer Alicia Garza\u2019s 2013 Facebook post containing the phrase \u2018black lives matter\u2019 as well as her friend and fellow organizer Patrisse Cullors\u2019 subsequently sharing that post with the hashtag #BlackLivesMatter as a pivotal moment in the modern civil rights movement era (Guynn 2015). Moreover even before the #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter movements Facebook was largely credited as a critical element in the 2011 Egyptian revolution (Vargas 2012).\nAdditionally corporations and other organizations have long acknowledged the impact of social media influencers and other online personalities on the general populace. Consequently many businesses and non-profit organizations partner with social-media influences to market their products or causes utilizing the power notoriety or fame of these social media figures (Anderson 2020). However although it is acknowledged that social media personalities have a tremendous platform that lends them a large audience to influence and share ideas with there is little research about the leadership function they fill in society. \nAccording to a 2021 Pew Research Center survey approximately seven in ten Americans use social media (Auxier & Anderson 2021). In addition 81% of survey participants report using the social media platform Youtube and 69% say they use Facebook (Pew Research Center 2021). While the data indicates that Americans utilize and engage with Social Media platforms it is still unclear to what degree social media influencers lead and affect the attitudes of the general populace. With the growing popularity and impact of social media use it\u2019s vital to gain a deeper perspective on the depth of influence social media platforms have to harness that power for good.\nA phenomenological study into the leadership role of social media influencers in modern society could illuminate the extent to which they guide societal attitudes and opinions. According to Tracy (2019) \u201cPhenomenology is the reflective study of pre\u2010reflective experience concerned with how people consciously experience specific phenomena things or stuff. Similar to grounded theory phenomenology does not specify or closely delineate what it expects to find in the study (p. 65). Accordingly this research will explore the relationship between online influence and authentic leadership utilizing an emic methodology where \u201cbehavior is described from the actor\u2019s point of view and is context\u2010specific\u201d (p. 26). However the primary purpose or goal of the phenomenological study will be to examine the significance and impact of social media personalities as authentic and thought leaders across various social media user age groups.\nAccording to Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) an emergent research design infers that the initial plan is fluid and that \u201csome or all phases of the process may change or shift after the researcher enters the field and begins to collect data\u2026the questions may change the forms of data collection may shift and the individuals studied may be modified (p. 259). Likewise the methodologies used during the research project may change. Moreover Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) advise that \u2018the idea behind qualitative research is to purposefully select participants or sites (or documents or visual material) that will best help the researcher understand the problem and the research question\u201d (p. 262). Hence I plan to gather data through three sources or data gathering methodologies.\nFirst I plan to curate a group of approximately four interview subjects. The subjects will represent four age ranges the Pew research survey data focuses on to correlate my findings better. I will also interview at least one social media personality with a significant following of 100000 users or more. In addition I will prepare a release form and gain the consent of all participants to use their personal details or for their varying levels of participation i.e. video audio recordings political affiliations etc. \nNext I will use the data from several annual Pew Research Center surveys on the social media platform use of adults in America. While I had considered preparing my own survey the data I wish to examine already exists and such an action would not be an efficient use of my time and efforts. In addition there are also several Gallup polls whose raw data I plan to use in research pursuits.\nAccording to Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) one category of qualitative data consists of \u201cqualitative audiovisual and digital materials (including social media materials). This data may take the form of photographs art objects videotapes website main pages e-mails text messages social media text or any forms of sound\u201d (p. 267). Thus I will also explore social-media platforms such as TikTok Youtube Reddit etc. to observe and examine whether social-media influencers actively engage in the behaviors that model or align with authentic leadership theory principles. My observations will likely inform the interview questions I prepare for study participants. \nMoreover Tracy (2019) asserts that fieldwork or participant witnessing \u201callows researchers to examine participants\u2019 actions as a means to understanding their values\u201d (p. 78). Exploring audio-visual and written materials on social media platforms like Twitter TikTok and Facebook are most akin to \u2018fieldwork\u2019 in the context of this project. Thus the observations or \u2018participant witnessing\u2019 that I engage in will help me discern the values and in turn the participants\u2019 authenticity and leadership or followership qualities.\nTo paint a clear picture of the relationship between social media influence and authentic leadership I would first review the written works of several writers and scholars in the field of authentic leadership. For example Peter G. Northouse is a Western Michigan University professor and writer of several books on leadership (Northouse 2019). Northouse\u2019s (2019) book titled Leadership: theory and practice begins by defining leadership. Northouse (2019) asserts that \u201cLeadership is a process whereby an individual influences a group of individuals to achieve a common goal\u201d (p. 43). Northouse (2019) then explores the history of leadership theory from the early 20th century onward. Each chapter onward then discusses a particular leadership theory or approach. \nIn chapter 9 Northouse (2019) gives an in-depth description of authentic leadership. He begins by claiming that:\nAuthentic leadership represents one of the newer areas of leadership research. It focuses on whether leadership is genuine and \u201creal.\u201d As the title of this approach implies authentic leadership is about the authenticity of leaders and their leadership\u2026 authentic leadership is still in the formative phase of development. As a result authentic leadership needs to be considered more tentatively: It is likely to change as new research about the theory is published (p. 308).\nNorthouse (2019) also describes the origins of authentic leadership and offers a rationale for its emerging popularity. However as asserted by Northouse authentic leadership theory is in its nascent stages so its application is not as readily recognizable. Even so Northouse (2019) clarifies and defines authentic leadership and its approaches within the chapter. Additionally Northouse also acknowledges the need for further research into authentic leadership theory. Therefore Northouse\u2019s general framework will be a helpful resource while studying the relationship between social media influence and authentic leadership.\nBlekkingh\u2019s (2015) and Wulffers\u2019 (2017) writing also provide insight into authentic leadership practices. For instance Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) book Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission explores authentic leadership practices while providing a guiding framework towards discovering one\u2019s purpose and achieving authenticity. In comparison while also equally relevant Wulffers\u2019 (2017) book titled Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching Approach provided critical insight into the mechanisms of authentic leadership while contending that authenticity is a spectrum. Wulffers\u2019 (2017) book is particularly pertinent as the writer examines the methodologies and components of authentic leadership development while also showing ample examples of authentic leaders in the public sphere.\nAfter using prior literature to shape the narrative and define my concept of authentic leadership I would also like to review the work of other scholars examining the effects of the internet and social media use in the modern age. For example Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis of prior studies done examining the relationship between internet use and political engagement is an ideal starting point to chart the trajectory of the effects of society\u2019s burgeoning social media use. In addition Boulianne (2009) concluded that \u201cthe meta-data establish that there is little evidence to support the argument that Internet use is contributing to civic decline. The findings suggest that the effect of Internet use on engagement is positive\u201d (p. 205). Booulianne\u2019s (2009) analysis shows a clear relationship between online and offline engagement. Hence one could use Bouliane\u2019s research as a provocation to learn more about the specific relationship between social media use and influence.\nHowever internet and social media use and online activism are not synonymous. Thus Christensen\u2019s (2011) article titled \u201cPolitical activities on the Internet: Slacktivism or political participation by other means?\u201d discussing the implications of and incentives to engaging in online activism give a critical alternate perspective on the question of whether social media personalities practice authentic leadership. Throughout the article Christensen (2011) synthesized and examined prior research for and against his central hypothesis. Christensen\u2019s (2011) conclusion that online activities promote offline participation suggests that online influence has a more significant effect on offline behavior than many studies have shown. Ultimately Christensen\u2019s article contextualizes the data from previous research referenced in ways that facilitate further analysis based on the article\u2019s premises and its references. \nFinally Anderson and Auxier\u2019s (2021) online article for the Pew Research Center website about social media use provides a starting point for the survey\u2019s data analysis. The article titled \u201cSocial Media Use in 2021\u201d summarizes the results of Pew Research Center\u2019s annual survey on American social media use. In the article Anderson and Auxier (2021) present the survey results to support their conclusions drawn from the survey data. However as Anderson and Auxier do not use the data to support claims of either causation or correlation their findings function more as commentary to the data presented. The article\u2019s central idea is \u201ca majority of Americans say they use YouTube and Facebook while use of Instagram Snapchat and TikTok is especially common among adults under 30\u201d (Anderson & Auxier 2021 para. 1). In the scope of my research the article primarily functions as a prompt to further examine the data and determine correlation or causation through my own findings.\nUltimately my reflexivity influences and informs this research project. I am an avid user of social media across multiple platforms. I am aware that I am open to the influence of social media personalities and thus am likely to modify some aspects of my life based on their recommendation. More importantly I have on multiple occasions changed my attitude toward a particular concept idea or even a political candidate and ideology because of views and opinions expressed by social media personalities. \nMoreover I do not think that I am in the minority. Most social media users are also influenced by what they read hear and see. Nonetheless regardless of what I may anticipate finding I am eager to research this topic to discover the thoughts and opinions of others and learn how they experience social media activism and engagement. \nHowever it seems to me that scholars have largely ignored the impact power influence and leadership abilities of social media creators to mobilize large groups of people towards a common goal. I feel passionate that it is essential to learn understand and raise awareness of the significance of social media content creators in shaping public attitudes and behaviors. I hope that my research could inspire scholars and educators to take social media platforms more seriously and reflect on what ideas they choose to convey and prompt further research into this area.\n\nReferences\nAnderson C. The planning for this course begins at the program's outset, continues through the evolution of learning, and culminates with\nthe student being fully prepared to implement the project during the CAP course. The specific content in the student\u2019s degree program\nprovides a foundation for the research and study of action towards positive change. Students integrate their program content,\nknowledge, skills, abilities, and professional experience to demonstrate how they learned to be more effective leaders for values-based,\nmeasurable, positive change.\n\nPrerequisites:\nThe capstone course is the last course to be completed in the student degree plan.\n\nObjectives\n\nInstitutional Learning Objectives:\n\n1. Demonstrate resilient, mindful leadership supported by shared power and a growth mindset.\n2. Model communication that includes diverse perspectives to build equitable outcomes.\n3. Collaborate with key stakeholders to incorporate ethical, innovative solutions for collective good.\n4. Facilitate conflict management through respectful dialogue, suspension of judgment, and unpacking of assumptions.\n5. Evaluate real-world problems to create constructive strategies based on research to achieve positive results.\n\nProgram Learning Objectives:\n\nBy the end of theMaster of Arts in Healthcare Administration Program, students will be able to:\n\n1. Healthcare Leadership: Analyze and evaluate leadership challenges and solutions within the field of healthcare and develop an\nunderstanding of the current healthcare environment in the U.S.\n\n2. Laws & Finances: Identify effective practice in healthcare operations by analyzing the complexity of the finance functions and\nreimbursement systems and the laws governing regulations.\n\n3. Analysis: Propose strategies for data analysis using epidemiologic principles for quality improvement.\n4. Change Management: Synthesize the major theories and principles of leadership and ethics, conduct personal and organizational\n\nanalysis, and develop behavioral change strategies in healthcare organizations.\n5. Collaboration: Demonstrate effective collaborative practices and cultural competence in communication and develop professional\n\nEffective Date: 08/30/2023. \u00a9 Copyright 2023

Conflict Resolution: Resolve conflicts through mindfulness, dialogue, and collaboration to bring about positive change.\n7. Action Research: Research, design, and implement a capstone project to affect a positive impact.\n\nBy the end of theMaster of Arts in Human Resources Management Program, students will be able to:\n\n1. Decision Making: Examine data and analytic insights, quantitative and qualitative relationships, and decision-making strategies within\na global and diverse workforce.\n\n2. Ethical Leadership: Lead ethically and responsibly in positions of power in a workplace, community, or organization.\n3. People Management: Understand the foundations of strategic human resource management, workforce planning and employment,\n\nand employee labor relations with a particular focus on mindfulness, dialogue and collaboration.\n4. Strategic Communication: Demonstrate the interpersonal and engagement skills necessary for effective leaders to achieve innovative\n\nand collaborative resolution to community and organization issues.\n5. Conflict Resolution: Resolve conflicts through mindfulness, dialogue, and collaboration to bring about positive change.\n6. Action Research: Research, design, and implement a capstone project to affect a positive impact.\n\nBy the end of theMaster of Arts in Organizational Leadership: Civic Engagement Program, students will be able to:\n\n1. Engagement: Evaluate the strengths and limitations of government, civic engagement, and public participation and the distinct roles of\neach in a representative democracy.\n\n2. Policy: Identify the elements of and develop the capability to, craft sound policy and programs driven by citizen participation.\n3. Civic Leadership: Analyze the strategies of engagement and apply appropriate strategies to lead people to effectively work together for\n\nsustainable results in the civic arena.\n4. Mindfulness: Apply awareness of self and the multi-faceted perspectives of others to lead in local and global contexts to reach\n\ncommon goals.\n5. Conflict Resolution: Assess the cause of conflict in organizational settings and apply strategies to resolve and leverage conflict in\n\ndiverse environments.\n6. Ethical Leadership: Lead ethically and responsibly in positions of power in a workplace, community, or organization.\n7. The objectives outlined in the syllabus emphasize demonstrating effective leadership, fostering positive change, and incorporating diverse perspectives to build equitable outcomes. Your research project aligns well with these goals by exploring how influencers can lead public opinion and potentially contribute to societal change.\n\nRegarding the possibility of completing the research project without conducting interviews or case studies to avoid the Institutional Review Board (IRB) process:\n\n1. Alternative Research Methods: Instead of primary data collection, you can use secondary data sources. This approach involves analyzing existing data, such as previous studies, public social media content, and analytics. You can review and synthesize findings from published research on social media influence, leadership theories, and the impact of digital communication on public opinion.\n\n2. Document Analysis: Examine public statements, social media posts, and digital interactions of influencers to analyze how they communicate and influence their audience. This method allows you to gather insights without the need for direct interaction.\n\n3. Content Analysis: Conduct a content analysis of social media platforms to understand the themes, patterns, and strategies used by influencers. This can provide a quantitative measure of influence tactics and audience engagement.\n\n4. Existing Databases and Reports: Utilize data from research institutes, think tanks, or analytics firms that have collected and analyzed social media trends and influencer impact. These resources often provide comprehensive data that can be used to support your research without needing IRB approval.\n\nBy focusing on secondary data and existing literature, you can avoid the complexities of the IRB process and still produce a meaningful analysis of how social media influencers enact leadership and influence public opinion. This approach is in line with the capstone's objective to use research skills to analyze real-world problems and create strategies for positive outcomes. Here's a revised version that maintains a personal touch while aligning more closely with academic expectations and the themes of your research:\n\n---\n\n"In our digital age, the art of influence has shifted dramatically, moving from personal interactions to virtual engagements across social media platforms. My experience with my fianc\u00e9, a person of deep skepticism and keen insight into the intentions of others, mirrors the dynamics of social media influence. He is difficult to sway without solid reasoning, much like the critical audience social media influencers encounter today. This personal insight into the challenges of influencing a skeptical individual has led me to explore how social media influencers manage to lead public opinion on critical issues. Leadership, as Northouse (2019) articulates, fundamentally revolves around the process of influence. This research delves into how this process unfolds in the realm of social media, transforming followers\u2019 views and fostering a new form of digital leadership."\n\n---\n\nThis version ties your personal anecdote directly to your research topic, establishing a clear link between personal observations and the academic exploration of leadership and influence on social media. Here are some suggestions on how to tweak it to suit an academic capstone research paper:\n\n1. Clarify the Relevance: Immediately connect your personal anecdote to the broader topic of your research. Explain why your fianc\u00e9's skepticism and leadership style are relevant to understanding social media influencers and leadership.\n\n2. Introduce the Research Focus: After presenting your fianc\u00e9's characteristics, quickly pivot to the specifics of your research. Mention the relevance of these personal insights to the dynamics of leadership in social media contexts.\n\n3. Cite Relevant Theories Upfront: Introduce Northouse\u2019s definition of leadership earlier to frame the discussion. This establishes the theoretical grounding right at the beginning.\n\n4. Limit Personal Details: While personal anecdotes can be engaging, ensure they don't overshadow the academic focus. Keep the personal story concise and directly related to the research questions or objectives.\n\n5. Set the Tone for Academic Rigor: Signal that this personal insight leads to a deeper, systematic exploration of the topic. Mention how this observation prompts a need to explore or challenge existing theories.\n\nHere\u2019s a slightly modified version based on these points:\n\n---\n\n"My fianc\u00e9, a man of inherent skepticism, seldom takes things at face value, always probing beneath the surface to discern others' true intentions. This trait makes him resistant to undue influence, reflecting a critical, analytical mindset\u2014one that is crucial in today's era of widespread social media influence. His approach echoes the complexities of leading in a digital age where influencers must navigate an increasingly skeptical audience. This personal insight into the nature of influence and leadership provides a unique lens through which I explore the broader concept of leadership as defined by Northouse (2019): a process fundamentally rooted in influence. This paper delves into how such influence is wielded by social media influencers, reshaping public opinion and leading societal shifts."\n\n---\n\nThis version keeps the personal element but ensures the focus remains on setting up your research into social media leadership."]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true

He knows how to influence others and lead people because, as Northouse (2019) asserts, leadership is an influence process.\nUnlike my fianc\u00e9, a significant portion of the population does not delve deeply into the authenticity of the information they receive; 18% of Americans report that social media has a large impact on their voting decisions, and 55% consider it their primary news source, according to a 2019 Pew research study. This widespread influence of social media raises a compelling question about the nature of leadership in the digital era. Building on Northouse's definition, I intend to argue that the influence exerted by social media can be seen as a form of authentic leadership. This form of leadership, practiced by social media influencers, aligns closely with authentic leadership theory, which emphasizes transparency, ethics, and a focus on the communal good. These influencers, through their pervasive reach and often personal engagement with followers, craft a modern narrative of leadership that significantly shapes public opinions and societal values.\nHowever to truly understand the pervasive and opinion molding role of social media one must first discern how media influences and shapes opinions. \nSocial media, everyday people big audience, big microphone for thought. \n \nThe third and fourth paragraphs are just shells and need to be expanded. Write a literature review synthesizing common themes amongst the reviewed sources. Follow the APA guidelines. This chapter should be 8-12 pages].\n\nSuccess Resources:\nWhat is a literature review? https://researchguides.uoregon.edu/litreview/synthesize#:~:text=About%20Synthesis&text=Combining%20elements%20of%20several%20sourcesnew%20ideas%20to%20existing%20knowledge\nHow to write a literature review\nhttps://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Vc_Yu_61Ymg\n\nSome themes that might be found in the research:\nExample topic: food shortage\nExample project: create a food resource flyer to post around local community\nSome themes that might be found in the research: how many people have a food shortage what communities struggle the most with food supply what is nourishing food what is a food resource how food resources get funded how food resources get food to share how restaurants might help how to volunteer what other communities/program could be used as a prototype to follow how to distribute flyers how to create informative flyers how to create engaging flyers etc.\nCHAPTER 4: Solutions\n[Project Goal]\n[In chapters one through three the field/topic/problem that deserves attention and carries social significance was defined and described. Both theory and practice were explored through the research in the literature review. With these chapters and any conversations with mentors in mind carefully craft a narrative that addresses the change (campaign initiative resource) being proposed.\nExplain briefly what this change is and why this change should take place. If a research question(s) is appropriate for the project please provide it/them. This section will include 3-5 pages that provide the process of the solution being proposed to implement.\nThis section must include research explaining why this solution is the best course of action. Examples might include training website blog Wiki page social media campaign evaluation process and rubric organizational philosophy mission/vision/values statement course syllabus webinar etc.] \n[Implementation]\n[Drawing from the goals narrated upload fully developed materials that would be used in implementation of the proposed solution. This might include video PowerPoint training manual quizzes handouts links etc. This is a substantial portion of the project and these materials should address how the proposed solution will be implemented from start to finish.\n[Project Measurements]\n\t[In this section describe what is being measured and what methods will be used to measure the success of the proposed project. In the design of the project plan think about how to measure successes/failures of the proposed solution. Once it\u2019s determined what to measure explain how to measure them. Like the section above this project proposal illustrates the researcher\u2019s expertise and informed process: explain what elements are being measured and why they are being chosen to measure; what is being measured and the methods being used to measure the project\u2019s outcome. Share the logic and thought process behind the measurements of the project.]\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\n\nCHAPTER 5: Reflections and Recommendations\nProject Summary\n\t[Briefly summarize the goal for the project the actions that were taken and the results realized.]\nReflections\n[Reflect on the project in its entirety. What was learned? What were the highest moments of the research process? What were the lowest moments? If the project moves forward provide recommendations for change. Discuss the strengths and weaknesses of the project.]\nRecommendations/Conclusions \n[What would be the next steps from this project? What are some recommendations for future researchers? How would the next researcher address the weaknesses of the project? Would the project be scalable? How so?? What would that look like? In addition it served as a platform for ordinary people to share their views and reactions during a time of uncertainty and unrest. Most notably TikTok the social media platform where users post short videos lip-singing and dancing rose to prominence.\nHowever throughout this time TikTok and other social media platforms became more than just a means for people to connect and express themselves. It also became the focal point and catalyst to demonstrations across the nation. During this period incendiary and inspirational hashtags such as \u2018#stopthesteal\u2019 and \u2018#sayhername\u2019 took center stage and entered the public vernacular. \nSocial media activism\u2014long looked down upon as lazy and ineffectual\u2014 suddenly became the vehicle activists used to recruit and organize. For example it\u2019s noted that many of the participants of the January 6th 2021 capital insurrection first tweeted or posted videos on Youtube promoting the January 6 demonstration that devolved into a riot (Atlantic Council\u2019s DFRLab 2021). At the time many political pundits argued that the January 6th insurrection occurred because of incendiary statements made both online and in-person by then President Donald Trump (Heilweil & Ghaffary 2021; \u201cTrump Impeached\u201d 2021). Later former President Trump would even be prosecuted impeached and banned from social media platforms for inciting the January 6th riot.\nIt\u2019s clear that social media influences and other online public figures hold tremendous sway over public opinion and attitudes in current times. Today one need never leave home to influence the attitude and practices of the public at large. Thus it begs the question \u2018Has social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 gotten a bad rap?\u2019 Is it possible to start a movement and effect positive change with a couple of keystrokes and a vision?\nI believe the answer to those questions is yes. If I could gather foremost experts on topics relevant to the subject together to discuss it at a cocktail party I feel confident they also would reach the same conclusion. Indeed suppose one were to examine the scope of their research. In that case one might find support for my assertion and further evidence of how social media influence or thought leadership influences and motivates the actions of the public at large.\nFor example my first guest would certainly be Peter Guy Northouse. Northouse\u2019s textbooks on leadership explore various leadership theories and provide several case studies for each application. In his research and writing Northouse (2019) displays a thorough understanding of the mechanics of how different kinds of leaders influence followers thinking and behavior (Northouse 2019 2021). If one wanted to elucidate and compare how the qualities exhibited by social media activists resembled and matched those of other prominent leaders and activists in history Northouse\u2019s research would be the best starting point. One need only delve into the research of Northouse to discover the primary qualities traits and approaches utilized by leaders.\nFor instance Northouse\u2019s 2019 book titled Leadership: theory and practice begins by discussing the dissonance between scholars about the meaning of leadership. Northouse (2019) also explores the history of leadership theory in the modern age. Northouse (2019) then defines leadership as \u201ca process whereby an individual influences a group of individuals to achieve a common goal\u201d (p. 43).\nOf the varied leadership descriptions available Northouse\u2019s definition of leadership aligns most with my thinking philosophy and research. Through all his case studies and descriptions of modern leadership theories and approaches he reveals how one needs only to have influence and lead followers toward a common goal to be a leader. As one may be influenced through many avenues over-simplifying leadership into an influence process allows many people who occupy non-traditional or new societal roles of influence to be considered leaders.\nHowever Northouse (2019) also asserts that \u201cit is the leader who often initiates the relationship creates the communication linkages and carries the burden for maintaining the relationship\u201d (p. 44). This assertion leads me to the second guest of my cocktail party. In order to discuss the mechanisms by which one could gain followers and initiate a meaningful and influential relationship with persons merely through how they present themselves and their ideas it seems that I would need a scholar knowledgeable about authentic leadership theory and practices. Thus my next guest would be author and university lecturer Bas W. Blekkingh.\nIn a book titled Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission Blekkingh (2015) presents a seven-layer model for achieving authenticity. More importantly Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) seven-layer model illustrates how authentic leaders can solve problems and influence others by identifying their own purpose. Moreover Blekkingh (2015) asserts that \u201cAuthentic Leadership amounts to \u2018exerting influence with your mission in mind in a genuine and reliable way\u2019\u201d (p. 149). Blekkingh\u2019s assertions and the subject of his book overall provide an answer to how social media influences may serve as authentic leaders in society and guide others toward a particular philosophy or way of thinking.\nHowever next I would want guests at my cocktail party whose research presented further data to support my claim. This guest\u2019s research would contain prior studies or statistical data collected that reflected the literary body of work of which my research would be an addition. Consequently the next guest invited to my hypothetical cocktail party would be an Instructor at Grant MacEwan College and the University of Alberta Shelly Boulianne.\nBoulianne\u2019s (2009) research titled \u201cDoes Internet Use Affect Engagement? A MetaAnalysis of Research\u201d initially published in the Political Communication journal meets these criteria perfectly. Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis of 38 studies examining the correlation between internet use and political engagement provides concrete evidence of the role of the internet in political engagement. Boulianne (2009) asserted there was \u201crelatively little research on the relationship between Internet use and political engagement\u201d at publication (p. 295). However Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis bridged a gap in the literature and was able to show on an aggregate level the positive effect of internet use on civic engagement. Boulianne (2009)

concluded that:\nIn this analysis of 38 studies and 166 effects testing the relationship between Internet use and political engagement the meta-data establish that there is little evidence to support the argument that Internet use is contributing to civic decline. The findings suggest that the effect of Internet use on engagement is positive. (p. 205)\nBoulianne\u2019s (2009) data and research serve as an essential link proving the potential for social media activism to affect public opinion and behavior. \n\tFinally the last guest I would invite to round out the discussion of whether social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 can result in positive social change is Henrik S. Christensen. As a scholar published author and doctoral candidate at the Department of Political Science at \u00c5bo Akademi University in Turku Finland Christensen\u2019s (2011) article offers a valued perspective on slactivism. In addition the author\u2019s research is relevant to my topic and represents part of the body of literature I would hope one day includes my research. \n\tIn a 2011 article titled \u201cPolitical activities on the Internet: Slacktivism or political participation by other means?\u201d initially published in the online academic journal First Monday Christensen (2011) discusses the societal implications of online activism and political engagement. Christensen (2011) cites and summarizes prior research devoted to the topic to reach a conclusion and answer the problem statement expressed in his introduction. In the article Christensen (2011) concludes that \u201ceven if it is not possible to dismiss the skepticism about the effectiveness of online participation it is premature to dismiss the impact of the Internet on political activism altogether\u201d (para. 60).\n\t Christensen\u2019s article explored prior research studies and presented data that either supported or challenged his idea. Christensen\u2019s article also reflected on and analyzed the arguments presented by other scholars to explain current societal behaviors. Thus in addition to Christensen\u2019s (2011) article being significantly relevant to my research topic it also represents an example of the kind of research product I wish my capstone project to be.\nMoreover each of my chosen cocktail party guest\u2019s work reflects on or further develops a particular aspect of the mechanics and significance of social media activism. Therefore I will likely refer to and cite their work in my capstone project. At the completion of my capstone project I hope that through exploring the research of others and extracting data about public opinion I will have proved the significance of online activism. In addition there is a gap in the literature that describes the role of authentic leadership in social media influence. Therefore my capstone project would prove and explain how one can affect positive change by living authentically and sharing your ideas or concerns online. \nIn modern society a tweet isn\u2019t just a tweet. In today\u2019s world interspersed between fun dancing and lip-syncing videos real issues affecting the community at large are being addressed. On TikTok people raise concerns comment on social issues and invite humanity to change for the better. The pandemic and other recent events have spotlighted how online activism can affect and direct offline public action. Going forward it is virtually indisputable that social media personalities and influencers have a tremendous platform that they can use to shape public perception of events and start a movement. By raising awareness of the significance of online influence I hope that people will take online platforms seriously and be cautious not to promote ideas and actions detrimental to society.\nReferences\nAtlantic Council\u2019s DFRLab. While Milano was not the originator of the phrase coined by activist Tarana Burke in 2006 Milano\u2019s tweet to her then three million-plus subscribers garnered thousands of responses overnight (Thomson 2018). Suddenly women who had suffered in silence\u2014sometimes even for years\u2014suddenly began to speak out about their experiences. Other victims bolstered and emboldened by what was becoming a culture of accountability for sexual harassment and assault perpetrators began to seize personal agency and confront their tormentors through official channels. \nThus what began as a mere tweet became a model for social media activism in the current age. Although the pandemic has affected society\u2019s primary modes of communication in past times social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 was looked down upon as lazy and ineffectual (Thomson 2018). However recent events such as the #MeToo movement might prompt one to reexamine long-held opinions on the topic. As more and more significant events driven by online activities occur one might question: Has slacktivism gotten a bad rap? Do we underestimate the leadership power of online influencers? Is social media influence an example of authentic leadership?\nAside from the #MeToo movement social media has been the purview and catalytic agent in many other social and political activities. For example many see organizer Alicia Garza\u2019s 2013 Facebook post containing the phrase \u2018black lives matter\u2019 as well as her friend and fellow organizer Patrisse Cullors\u2019 subsequently sharing that post with the hashtag #BlackLivesMatter as a pivotal moment in the modern civil rights movement era (Guynn 2015). Moreover even before the #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter movements Facebook was largely credited as a critical element in the 2011 Egyptian revolution (Vargas 2012).\nAdditionally corporations and other organizations have long acknowledged the impact of social media influencers and other online personalities on the general populace. Consequently many businesses and non-profit organizations partner with social-media influences to market their products or causes utilizing the power notoriety or fame of these social media figures (Anderson 2020). However although it is acknowledged that social media personalities have a tremendous platform that lends them a large audience to influence and share ideas with there is little research about the leadership function they fill in society. \nAccording to a 2021 Pew Research Center survey approximately seven in ten Americans use social media (Auxier & Anderson 2021). In addition 81% of survey participants report using the social media platform Youtube and 69% say they use Facebook (Pew Research Center 2021). While the data indicates that Americans utilize and engage with Social Media platforms it is still unclear to what degree social media influencers lead and affect the attitudes of the general populace. With the growing popularity and impact of social media use it\u2019s vital to gain a deeper perspective on the depth of influence social media platforms have to harness that power for good.\nA phenomenological study into the leadership role of social media influencers in modern society could illuminate the extent to which they guide societal attitudes and opinions. According to Tracy (2019) \u201cPhenomenology is the reflective study of pre\u2010reflective experience concerned with how people consciously experience specific phenomena things or stuff. Similar to grounded theory phenomenology does not specify or closely delineate what it expects to find in the study (p. 65). Accordingly this research will explore the relationship between online influence and authentic leadership utilizing an emic methodology where \u201cbehavior is described from the actor\u2019s point of view and is context\u2010specific\u201d (p. 26). However the primary purpose or goal of the phenomenological study will be to examine the significance and impact of social media personalities as authentic and thought leaders across various social media user age groups.\nAccording to Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) an emergent research design infers that the initial plan is fluid and that \u201csome or all phases of the process may change or shift after the researcher enters the field and begins to collect data\u2026the questions may change the forms of data collection may shift and the individuals studied may be modified (p. 259). Likewise the methodologies used during the research project may change. Moreover Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) advise that \u2018the idea behind qualitative research is to purposefully select participants or sites (or documents or visual material) that will best help the researcher understand the problem and the research question\u201d (p. 262). Hence I plan to gather data through three sources or data gathering methodologies.\nFirst I plan to curate a group of approximately four interview subjects. The subjects will represent four age ranges the Pew research survey data focuses on to correlate my findings better. I will also interview at least one social media personality with a significant following of 100000 users or more. In addition I will prepare a release form and gain the consent of all participants to use their personal details or for their varying levels of participation i.e. video audio recordings political affiliations etc. \nNext I will use the data from several annual

Pew Research Center surveys on the social media platform use of adults in America. While I had considered preparing my own survey the data I wish to examine already exists and such an action would not be an efficient use of my time and efforts. In addition there are also several Gallup polls whose raw data I plan to use in research pursuits.\nAccording to Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) one category of qualitative data consists of \u201cqualitative audiovisual and digital materials (including social media materials). This data may take the form of photographs art objects videotapes website main pages e-mails text messages social media text or any forms of sound\u201d (p. 267). Thus I will also explore social-media platforms such as TikTok Youtube Reddit etc. to observe and examine whether social-media influencers actively engage in the behaviors that model or align with authentic leadership theory principles. My observations will likely inform the interview questions I prepare for study participants. \nMoreover Tracy (2019) asserts that fieldwork or participant witnessing \u201callows researchers to examine participants\u2019 actions as a means to understanding their values\u201d (p. 78). Exploring audio-visual and written materials on social media platforms like Twitter TikTok and Facebook are most akin to \u2018fieldwork\u2019 in the context of this project. Thus the observations or \u2018participant witnessing\u2019 that I engage in will help me discern the values and in turn the participants\u2019 authenticity and leadership or followership qualities.\nTo paint a clear picture of the relationship between social media influence and authentic leadership I would first review the written works of several writers and scholars in the field of authentic leadership. For example Peter G. Northouse is a Western Michigan University professor and writer of several books on leadership (Northouse 2019). Northouse\u2019s (2019) book titled Leadership: theory and practice begins by defining leadership. Northouse (2019) asserts that \u201cLeadership is a process whereby an individual influences a group of individuals to achieve a common goal\u201d (p. 43). Northouse (2019) then explores the history of leadership theory from the early 20th century onward. Each chapter onward then discusses a particular leadership theory or approach. \nIn chapter 9 Northouse (2019) gives an in-depth description of authentic leadership. He begins by claiming that:\nAuthentic leadership represents one of the newer areas of leadership research. It focuses on whether leadership is genuine and \u201creal.\u201d As the title of this approach implies authentic leadership is about the authenticity of leaders and their leadership\u2026 authentic leadership is still in the formative phase of development. As a result authentic leadership needs to be considered more tentatively: It is likely to change as new research about the theory is published (p. 308).\nNorthouse (2019) also describes the origins of authentic leadership and offers a rationale for its emerging popularity. However as asserted by Northouse authentic leadership theory is in its nascent stages so its application is not as readily recognizable. Even so Northouse (2019) clarifies and defines authentic leadership and its approaches within the chapter. Additionally Northouse also acknowledges the need for further research into authentic leadership theory. Therefore Northouse\u2019s general framework will be a helpful resource while studying the relationship between social media influence and authentic leadership.\nBlekkingh\u2019s (2015) and Wulffers\u2019 (2017) writing also provide insight into authentic leadership practices. For instance Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) book Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission explores authentic leadership practices while providing a guiding framework towards discovering one\u2019s purpose and achieving authenticity. In comparison while also equally relevant Wulffers\u2019 (2017) book titled Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching Approach provided critical insight into the mechanisms of authentic leadership while contending that authenticity is a spectrum. Wulffers\u2019 (2017) book is particularly pertinent as the writer examines the methodologies and components of authentic leadership development while also showing ample examples of authentic leaders in the public sphere.\nAfter using prior literature to shape the narrative and define my concept of authentic leadership I would also like to review the work of other scholars examining the effects of the internet and social media use in the modern age. For example Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis of prior studies done examining the relationship between internet use and political engagement is an ideal starting point to chart the trajectory of the effects of society\u2019s burgeoning social media use. In addition Boulianne (2009) concluded that \u201cthe meta-data establish that there is little evidence to support the argument that Internet use is contributing to civic decline. The findings suggest that the effect of Internet use on engagement is positive\u201d (p. 205). Booulianne\u2019s (2009) analysis shows a clear relationship between online and offline engagement. Hence one could use Bouliane\u2019s research as a provocation to learn more about the specific relationship between social media use and influence.\nHowever internet and social media use and online activism are not synonymous. Thus Christensen\u2019s (2011) article titled \u201cPolitical activities on the Internet: Slacktivism or political participation by other means?\u201d discussing the implications of and incentives to engaging in online activism give a critical alternate perspective on the question of whether social media personalities practice authentic leadership. Throughout the article Christensen (2011) synthesized and examined prior research for and against his central hypothesis. Christensen\u2019s (2011) conclusion that online activities promote offline participation suggests that online influence has a more significant effect on offline behavior than many studies have shown. Ultimately Christensen\u2019s article contextualizes the data from previous research referenced in ways that facilitate further analysis based on the article\u2019s premises and its references. \nFinally Anderson and Auxier\u2019s (2021) online article for the Pew Research Center website about social media use provides a starting point for the survey\u2019s data analysis. The article titled \u201cSocial Media Use in 2021\u201d summarizes the results of Pew Research Center\u2019s annual survey on American social media use. In the article Anderson and Auxier (2021) present the survey results to support their conclusions drawn from the survey data. However as Anderson and Auxier do not use the data to support claims of either causation or correlation their findings function more as commentary to the data presented. The article\u2019s central idea is \u201ca majority of Americans say they use YouTube and Facebook while use of Instagram Snapchat and TikTok is especially common among adults under 30\u201d (Anderson & Auxier 2021 para. 1). In the scope of my research the article primarily functions as a prompt to further examine the data and determine correlation or causation through my own findings.\nUltimately my reflexivity influences and informs this research project. I am an avid user of social media across multiple platforms. I am aware that I am open to the influence of social media personalities and thus am likely to modify some aspects of my life based on their recommendation. More importantly I have on multiple occasions changed my attitude toward a particular concept idea or even a political candidate and ideology because of views and opinions expressed by social media personalities. \nMoreover I do not think that I am in the minority. Most social media users are also influenced by what they read hear and see. Nonetheless regardless of what I may anticipate finding I am eager to research this topic to discover the thoughts and opinions of others and learn how they experience social media activism and engagement. \nHowever it seems to me that scholars have largely ignored the impact power influence and leadership abilities of social media creators to mobilize large groups of people towards a common goal. I feel passionate that it is essential to learn understand and raise awareness of the significance of social media content creators in shaping public attitudes and behaviors. I hope that my research could inspire scholars and educators to take social media platforms more seriously and reflect on what ideas they choose to convey and prompt further research into this area.\n\nReferences\nAnderson C. He examines and critiques common approaches and ideas held in the academic community regarding authentic leadership theory. The author goes on to summarize and discuss current approaches to authentic leadership development. Berkovich (2010) identifies and discusses the central focus \u2018narrative identity processing\u2019 and \u2018dramaturgical enactment\u2019 of two of the foremost didactic methods for authentic leadership development. He then suggests a new perspective based in dialogical philosophy and sets about describing a proposed framework for dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership. Berkovich (2010) identifies eight areas of dialogical pedagogy which are useful in authentic leadership development: care contact critical thinking empathy mutuality open-mindedness respect and self-exposure. Finally the article evaluates and critiques the use and outcomes of using dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership development initiatives.\n\tThe source was useful in that the author first defined his view of the current perspectives in authentic leadership before exploring a new perspective. The author discusses the foundations and mechanics of dialogical pedagogy in an in-depth manner which is helpful in understanding the overall purpose and ideas set forth in the article. The article is from a peer reviewed scholarly journal and is found easily through a simple search in EbscoHost through the university\u2019s library.\nBlekkingh B. W. (2015). Infinite \tIdeas; eBook Collection (EBSCOhost). \t <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspxdirect=true&db=nlebk&AN=987184&site=ehost-live\nThis e-book explores the ideas present in authentic leadership theory with the intent to use them as a tool for discovering ones purpose. Blekkingh (2015) approaches his topic through a seven layer model which he postulates is the framework of all human beings. These seven layers in chapter discussion order are: environment behavior skills norms ego values and authenticity. The initial seven chapters are each focused on one of these layers and the problems associated with each layer. Blekkingh (2015) suggests that through this layered self reflection one is enabled to find their authentic self and their purpose. He presents the idea that this once an individual is aware of their authentic self and purpose they will be able to \u201cput Authentic Leadership into effect\u201d (Blekkingh 2015 p. x). Finally he concludes the book with resources for further exploration and includes a lengthy appendix that functions as kind of encyclopedia with supplemental materials.\n\tThe author is a credible source in the field of authentic leadership theory due to his work as both an authentic leadership lecturer at a Dutch university and as one of the founders of a consultancy firm centered around the tenets of authentic leadership. One failing of the book as Authentic Leadership resource is that many of the examples in the book are mainly anecdotal and lack an academic or scientific robustness. In contrast the authors simple language and engaging exercises make his ideas and pedagogy easily understood and applicable to anyone.\nGardner W. L. Avolio B. J. Luthans F. May D. R. & Walumbwa F. (2005) contend that \u201cthe purpose of this article is to further develop and extend an emerging theory of authentic leadership development\u201d (p. 344). The authors begin by defining their interpretation of the constructs of authenticity authentic leadership and authentic followership. Gardner et al (2005) then discuss a conceptual authentic leadership framework for leader and follower development. Gardner et al (2005) propose what they describe as a \u201cself-based model of the developmental processes for authentic leadership and followership\u201d (p. 348). This model sets forth the idea that a leader\u2019s personal history is the catalyst for authentic leadership development (Gardner et al. 2005). The authors identify self-awareness and self-regulation as two fundamental components of authentic leadership development and they discuss both these concepts in depth. Also at the heart of this article is the idea that authentic leaders are positive role models for followers and consistently model authentic behavior balanced processing self-awareness and transparency.\n\tThis article is a valuable resource in examining authentic leadership theory because it examines authentic leadership development using a reflective perspective which looks at the roles of both the leader and follower. The authors also clearly and succinctly define the various components of their authentic leadership model. One area for critique is that the authors don\u2019t provide any concrete examples of the outcomes they predict making the subject matter of the article entirely theoretical. \nHsieh C.-C. & Wang D.-S. (2015). Does supervisor-perceived authentic leadership influence \temployee work engagement through employee-perceived authentic leadership and employee \ttrust? The study focuses on the influence of authentic leadership on employee trust and engagement from a supervisor-employee perspective. Hsieh & Wang (2015) made four distinct hypothesis concerning employee and supervisor perceptions of authentic leadership and its mediatory relationship with employee trust and engagement. The study sample was taken from the responses of 77 supervisors and 345 employees from 36 of Taiwan\u2019s best performing companies (Hsieh & Wang 2015). The results of the study were quantified using study participants questionnaire responses which were then converted to statistical data and applied to a hierarchical linear model. Using this data the authors were able to conclude that \u201csupervisor-perceived authentic leadership has a fully mediating influence on employee work engagement through employee trust\u201d (Hsieh & Wang 2015 p. 2341).\n\tThis study is a valuable resource for authentic leadership theory because of its use of statistical data. The presentation of quantifiable results gives greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions. Hsieh & Wang\u2019s (2015) presentation of their authentic leadership research hypothesis test and findings present a clear picture of the application of authentic leadership and its probable outcomes.\nKerfoot K. (2006). Authentic Leadership. Kerfoot (2006) presents the idea that leader authenticity cannot be self-defined it lies only in the perception of followers. The author also suggests that authenticity may be a character trait but then postulates that through mentoring and confidence one can create the perception of authenticity as a leader (Kerfoot 2006).\n\tThis composition clearly defines the author\u2019s idea of authentic leadership and its importance. While the article does state several arguable conjectures they are all supported by the cited references from other credible sources. This article is relevant and helpful to any authentic leadership research in that it gives context to\u2014and an application of\u2014authentic leadership theory in a specific profession.\nMehmood Q. Business Source Elite. \t <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=119180634&site=ehost-live\nThis article presents the findings of a research study concerning authentic leadership. Specifically the study examined the role of authentic leadership on employees developmental goals and the correlation between supervisor authentic leadership and employee performance (Mehmood et al. 2016). The authors put forth three distinct hypothesis which predict that authentic leadership positively predicts followers learning goal orientation and indirectly positively predicts followers performance and engagement. The study sample of participants included 115 supervisors and 345 employees in the Pakistani Telecommunications sector (Mehmood et al. 2016). Similar to the study conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) a questionnaire and statistical data was used to quantify the results. Mehmood et al. (2016) were able to conclude there is \u201cevidence that authentic leadership predicts followers' in\u2010role performance and civic virtue extra\u2010role performance through followers' LGO\u201d (p. 882).\n\tThis article is a credible source due to being published as part of peer-reviewed scholarly journal. Additionally the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors conclusions. One criticism of this source is that it does not discuss much of the research that the authors conducted in authentic leadership theory before they arrived at their hypothesis. The authors site an extensive list of credible sources from which they formulated their ideas but it may have been helpful for them to be more in-depth. \nQian J. Yang F. & Han Z. R. (2016). WorldCat.org. \t <LINK> https://doi.org/10.1007/s12144-015-9316-z\nThe article suggests that a key influencing mechanism on feedback-seeking behavior in the leader-follower dyadic relationship is through followers cognitive and emotive processes. This composition describes how authentic leadership and employees\u2019 cognitive and emotive perspectives influence feedback-seeking behaviors. Qian et al. (2016) argue \u201cthat authentic leadership influences feedback seeking indirectly through employees\u2019 perceptions about value and cost\u201d (p.4 82). They also put forth a model where authentic leadership correlates with employee positive emotions thereby indirectly fostering feedback-seeking behavior (Qian et al. 2016).\n\tThe article provides a focused view of authentic leadership and how it correlates with feedback-seeking behaviors. The authors cite an extensive amount of credible sources and literature to support their claims but at times this may cause a reader to get the sense that they\u2019re not putting forth any new ideas. One criticism of the composition is that due to its focused view some portions of the article seem almost redundant.\nRego A. Vit\u00f3ria A. Magalh\u00e3es A. Ribeiro N. & e Cunha M. P. (2013). Are authentic leaders \tassociated with more virtuous committed and potent teams? The Leadership Quarterly 24(1) \t61\u201379. <LINK> https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2012.08.002\nThis peer-reviewed article concerns a study which examines how authentic leadership predicts team potency both directly and indirectly. Rego et al. (2013) suggests that authentic leadership alone \u201cis not sufficient to achieve positive team outcomes\u201d (p. 62). The authors assert that team affective commitment and team virtuousness may also be a link between authentic leadership and team potency. Therefore the study also explores the mediatory role of team affective commitment and virtuousness. The study was conducted at a Portuguese university with 59 teams of sizes ranging from 4-21 members. Similar to the study conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) as well as Mehmood et al. (2016) a questionnaire and statistical data was used to quantify the results. Rogo et al. (2013) were able to conclude that \u201cthe findings suggest that AL [authentic leadership] predicts team potency via the mediating role of team virtuousness and team affective commitment\u201d (p. 75).\n\tMany of the studies which concern themselves with the effects of authentic leadership focus on individual follower outcomes. This study is rare in that is examines the effects of authentic leadership on group outcomes. This rarity makes it an exceptional resource for authentic leadership theory research. The authors described the concepts of authentic leadership which lead to their hypothesis in detail which provided ample supplementary information on their study topic. As with the studies conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) as well as Mehmood et al. (2016) the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors conclusions. \nShapira-Lishchinsky O. (2014). The study found that there were 2 main advantages of TBSs: TBSs create a supportive environment to learn from participant mistakes and TBSs heightened educational leader awareness of their caring responsibilities. Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014) was able to conclude that TBSs provide a framework for ethical discussion but did not ever establish a firm correlation between authentic leadership development in educational leaders and TBSs.\n\tAlthough this study is peer reviewed its results were not presented in the form of quantifiable data. While the study did include detailed research relating to authentic leadership and also clearly stated its methodology ultimately it is not the best resource for the study of authentic leadership theory.

It does however provide ample information and examples which could be correlated with authentic leadership theory through conjecture and deduction.\nWulffers T. (2017). Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching \tApproach. KR Publishing; eBook Collection (EBSCOhost). \t <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=1595178&site=ehost-live\nWullffers (2017) begins by commenting on the state of leadership today and also examining the consequences of poor leadership. The author cites authentic leadership theory as a key method for achieving a better quality of leadership. Wullffers (2017) states that \u201cauthentic leaders are leaders who know who they are and who are true to themselves\u201d (p. 7). The book examines what authentic leadership is from a scholarly perspective and cites multiple literary works concerning the mechanisms of authentic leadership. The author then examines the components and methodologies of authentic leadership development. Wullffers (2017) describes leader authenticity as a spectrum with \u201cleadership development levels of maturity that shape the moral and cognitive capacities\u201d (p. 57) of leaders. The author then goes on to discuss how leaders may navigate up developmental levels. Finally Wulffers (2017) examines well known leaders through the lens of authentic leadership (p. 208).\n\tWhile the author does make some assertions this book functions mainly as an extended case study and detailed manual on how to achieve leader authenticity. The author heavily references previous literature on authentic leadership theory as well as her own experiences to formulate her ideas. The book includes several appendices and end-notes which enhance its usefulness in authentic leadership theory research. Wullffers is also lent a greater credibility through endorsements and reviews by industry leaders.\n\n\n\n\t\n\n\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2005.03.001""]\n[URL: "direct=true&db=bsh&AN=96695857&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: "direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=987184&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=17426678&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=108302656&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=108302656&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: "live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=119180634&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1007/s12144-015-9316-z""]\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2012.08.002""]\n[URL: """"]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=1595178&site=ehost-live""]\nThe file is too long and its contents have been truncated.\n", "title": "annotated bib LL-1.docx", "tether_id": null}, "status": "finished_successfully", "end_turn": null, "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"command": "context_stuff", "is_visually_hidden_from_conversation": true, "message_type": null, "model_slug": "gpt-4", "default_model_slug": "gpt-4",

Below is a suggested draft that integrates these elements and aligns with your specified requirements:\n\n---\n\n### Chapter 1: Introduction\n\nThe Topic: \nIn the era of digital dominance, the rise of social media influencers has revolutionized the traditional dynamics of leadership and influence. As platforms like Twitter, Facebook, and Instagram continue to grow, these individuals have emerged not just as entertainers but as significant leaders in public discourse. This project explores the phenomenon of social media influencers as modern leaders, focusing on how they shape public opinion on critical societal issues through their platforms.\n\nSocial Significance: \nSocial media's pervasive influence is undeniable, with a significant impact on public opinion and societal norms. According to Pew Research, 18% of Americans say social media platforms substantially influence their political decisions, and over half regard these platforms as their primary news source (Pew Research Center, 2021). The leadership role of influencers in this context raises critical questions about the authenticity and ethical dimensions of their influence. This exploration is crucial, given the potential of these platforms to affect elections, policy discussions, and social movements, as evidenced by movements like #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter. The cost of misinformation or manipulative content can be high, making it imperative to understand and contextualize the type of leadership exerted through these channels.\n\nConclusion: \nThis research aims to delineate the characteristics of leadership exhibited by social media influencers and assess its alignment with authentic leadership theories. By exploring the intersection of social media and leadership, this study seeks to contribute to a deeper understanding of digital influence and its implications for leadership in the 21st century. This examination is intended to bridge the gap in literature concerning the effectiveness and authenticity of social media-driven leadership, setting the stage for a comprehensive review in the subsequent chapters.\n\nReferences \n- Northouse, P. This project explores the phenomenon of social media influencers as modern leaders, focusing on how they shape public opinion on critical societal issues through their platforms.\n\nSocial Significance: \nSocial media's pervasive influence is undeniable, with a significant impact on public opinion and societal norms. According to Pew Research, 18% of Americans say social media platforms substantially influence their political decisions, and over half regard these platforms as their primary news source (Pew Research Center, 2021). The leadership role of influencers in this context raises critical questions about the authenticity and ethical dimensions of their influence. This exploration is crucial, given the potential of these platforms to affect elections, policy discussions, and social movements, as evidenced by movements like #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter. The cost of misinformation or manipulative content can be high, making it imperative to understand and contextualize the type of leadership exerted through these channels.\n\nConclusion: \nThis research aims to delineate the characteristics of leadership exhibited by social media influencers and assess its alignment with authentic leadership theories. By exploring the intersection of social media and leadership, this study seeks to contribute to a deeper understanding of digital influence and its implications for leadership in the 21st century. This capstone project investigates the transformative role of social media influencers in shaping public opinion and leading societal discussions. In a world where digital platforms like Twitter, Facebook, and Instagram not only dominate but define public discourse, these influencers emerge not merely as entertainers but as pivotal figures in leadership. They wield power capable of initiating significant social changes and influencing political outcomes, positioning themselves as central figures in the ongoing dialogue about leadership in the digital era.\n\n#### Social Significance:\nThe influence of social media is profound and ubiquitous, reaching across all sectors of society. According to Pew Research, approximately 72% of the U.S. public uses some type of social media, with varying impacts on social, political, and community engagement (Pew Research Center, 2021). The breadth of this influence spans across diverse demographic groups, making nearly everyone a potential recipient of communicated messages, whether accurate or misleading. The potential benefits of this influence include increased awareness and mobilization for social causes, as seen with movements like #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter, which have propelled significant societal shifts and brought critical issues to the forefront of global awareness. However, the risks involve the spread of misinformation and the manipulation of public opinion, which can polarize communities and disrupt democratic processes. The cost of such influence can be seen in the widespread controversies surrounding elections and public policy debates, where influencers have swayed public sentiment through both genuine and questionable means.\n\nThe individuals most impacted by this phenomenon include young adults, who are the most active on platforms like Instagram and TikTok and are particularly susceptible to influencer marketing and political campaigns (Anderson & Jiang, 2021). This demographic's high engagement levels highlight the critical need to understand the mechanisms of influence and leadership within these digital platforms.\n\n#### Conclusion:\nThis research project is situated at the intersection of leadership theory and digital media studies. It aims to critically analyze the role of social media influencers as contemporary leaders who not only entertain but also significantly influence societal values and norms. By aligning the characteristics of social media leadership with authentic leadership theories, this study will evaluate the authenticity and ethical considerations of influencers' practices. The findings are expected to provide insights into how digital platforms can be harnessed for responsible and effective leadership, promoting positive change while mitigating risks associated with digital influence. This foundational exploration sets the stage for a detailed literature review in Chapter 2, where theories of leadership and empirical studies on digital influence will be synthesized to build a comprehensive framework for understanding leadership in the digital age.\n\nReferences:\n- Anderson, M., & Jiang, J. There is nothing to fear when the High Priestess appears, upright or reversed. There is magic afoot. The Universe is communicating with you in serendipitous and synchronistic ways. If you make time to center, feel your feelings, and quiet mental chatter, your inner wisdom will guide you out of any rut. Sometimes the biggest block to hearing your Spirit's inner wisdom is the fear of feeling something uncomfortable. Many people distract themselves from the discomfort and avoid resolving the imbalance. The Hermit represents the need to periodically withdraw from the world and reconnect with your deeper awareness. Do you take time to regularly reconnect with the wisdom residing within your center? Do you habitually distract or numb yourself from what is causing your discomfort rather than looking at it? Are you conscious of the Wise One who resides within? The Hermit takes his lantern into the dark, uncomfortable places to examine what's there. His staff and beard symbolize the stability and wisdom that you can always find within. If you examine the card, you'll notice he's traveling over snow. This symbolizes feelings that you have 'put on ice.' The snow can also represent freezing or numbing pain. The gentle Hermit comes with his warm, illuminating lantern and his sturdy staff of wisdom. These can melt the cold ice that metaphorically forms around the heart, allowing feelings to be resolved and released. Under his gentle guidance, he can show you the hidden lesson beneath the ice. Does your heart feel like it's keeping something frozen? Can you feel the feelings within your heart, or does it feel numb? The fear of discomfort is just a mask, preventing you from accessing your deeper wisdom. One error many people make with the lesson of the Hermit is mistaking 'wisdom' with 'thinking.' 'If I just sit here alone and think about this uncomfortable thing for a long time, I will figure it out.' Thinking about problems just leaves the anxiety in the background to go unchecked as your mind frantically races from one hollow solution to another. Thinking about the discomfort doesn't really resolve it. Feeling it does. Many times, people are so scared of feeling that they pull out their phone, have a drink, or binge-watch television, thinking, 'That will get that inner chatter to shut up for a while.' Avoidance freezes the feeling for a time, but the unfelt feelings remain under the ice and grow in strength until they finally burst through. This process takes longer for some people than others, but it always ends the same... with a twitch, a feeling of being hollow, or a nervous breakdown. If you are courageous enough to go within, seek your discomfort, pull the mask back, and feel the feelings you are avoiding, you will discover that this discomfort is a wise teacher and friend. The deeper awareness residing beneath the fear will calmly tell you what you need. This is your inner Wise One. The inner Wise One will show you how to resolve and release what is troubling you. Today, reflect on what is going on within you. Is there something making you anxious? Are you dulled, numb, or frozen? Take time to connect with the sacred hermit within. He will safely guide you to what lies beneath the ice. There is nothing to fear with the Hermit guiding you. Take the time to light a sacred candle in a quiet place. Be brave and melt any ice that may have formed around your feelings. Pull back surface fears. Look beneath the ice. Examine what the Hermit is guiding you to understand. Another card drawn may illuminate the issue that needs healing. You will know that you have found the answer when you say, 'Aha! That's what I needed to resolve within myself.' The Devil can be a jarring image to face. This is because he represents our shadow self, the inner saboteur. This the insidious voice within that tells us we aren't worthy, that we can't be successful, and that we are stuck with our lot. Often this voice pipes up just before we are about to make a huge breakthrough. This voice comes as a final test to see what we really believe about ourselves. The Devil is known by many names, but by far the most fitting is the Prince of Lies. The biggest lie the Devil tells is that he is more powerful than we are. Each day you have a choice to believe the voice that tells you you are garbage or to hear your better angels who remind you that you are worthy. How does your shadow manifest in your life? Do you struggle with self-esteem? Do you feel trapped in a situation that feels beyond your control? When you look at the image of the Devil card, you can see a man and a woman chained to his throne. They are a corrupted version of the innocent and pure man and woman who appear on the Lovers card. The trees that were featured on the Lovers card now appear in the form of unnatural tails sprouting from the pair. This shows how applying life and knowledge solely toward materialism and external gratification leads to corruption. The two figures also sport horns, symbolizing their enslavement to the animal parts of their nature. The animal nature is only concerned with survival and protection of itself. It is not enlightened and manifests in the form of fear, excess, jealousy, anger, hatred, addiction, unforgiveness, and the pursuit of personal comfort over all else. Look closer at the figures chained to the Devil's throne. The chains represent the falsehood of being stuck; the chains the figures wear are quite loose. In fact, they could step out of them at any time! This shows that despite the fearful size of the Devil, one can be free of him whenever they choose. When the Devil appears, he calls your attention to the self-limiting thoughts and behaviors that are keeping you imprisoned. You can be free at any time, but you must stop rationalizing these behaviors and confront them honestly. Written on the Devil's right hand is the symbol for Saturn. In astrology, Saturn rules limitations, setbacks, and self-improvement over time. This implies that honestly confronting your inner shadows will compel you to improve over time, even if the process feels uncomfortable. The Devil highlights any untruths you may be telling yourself that are keeping you from being the best version of yourself. The shadow is real, but you are more powerful. The best way to transcend shadows is to embody love. Be loving to yourself and others. Don't get hooked into defending yourself in the face of someone else's shadow. Lovingly help someone else. Be of service. Be kinder. If you are feeling fear, help someone else feel braver. Challenge the lie that you are stuck. Send light and love to those people you can't quite seem to forgive. They built walls around themselves that grew taller and taller. These walls separated them from feeling reality. The Tower gained in size and made them numb. Being numb kept them 'safe from being hurt by the past and the present. In the Tower, they could pretend there was no loss, change, or death happening outside. They would say things like, 'I'm great! No sad things ever happened; what are you talking about?' The lightning on the card represents the inevitable crisis the Universe always sends to cause those in denial to wake up and to heal what needs healing. One falling figure is crowned, while the other is not. This symbolizes that being in a state of denial is unsustainable, whether you are a commoner or a king. Are there unresolved hurts from the past that you need to heal, surrender, and clear? What would you rather not deal with right now? Do you zone out to deny reality? Is there a fear that, if you open yourself to feeling it, it will hurt too much and won't stop hurting? Despite the destructive imagery, the Tower is one of the most healing cards in the tarot. The Tower snaps us out of pretending we are not hurting. It is a cathartic card where old pains are finally felt and released for healing. In that way, the old pains no longer keep us a prisoner escaping reality. When you reflect on your life, you'll realize the moments that made you strongest are often the hard times. Avoiding challenges doesn't make us strong - dealing with them does. Denial of truth is unsustainable. Spirit, God, or the Universe always sends along a proverbial lightning bolt to snap us out of delusion. The breakdown moment is surprisingly a blessing. Lightning bolts symbolize flashes of divine magic and epiphanies at play in your life. Once reality is accepted, it can then be healed. The people falling from the Tower are returning to earth. Not only are they returning to reality, but they are returning to their true nature as well. The crowned roof of the Tower is also being ejected, symbolizing a need to get out of the rationalizations of your head and get back to reality. ["Yes, a person can still sell or give away the property even after receiving a notice that a hypothec (a legal claim or lien on property) will take effect in 30 days for non-payment of taxes. However, there are important considerations to keep in mind:\n\n1. Disclosure: The seller must disclose the pending hypothec to potential buyers. Failure to disclose this can result in legal consequences.\n\n2. Clear Title: The buyer will likely require a clear title to the property. The hypothec notice indicates that there is a pending lien, which can complicate the sale. Many buyers will insist that the taxes be paid and the lien resolved before completing the transaction.\n\n3. Negotiation with Buyer: In some cases, the buyer might agree to proceed with the purchase and take on the responsibility of paying the outstanding taxes. This would typically be reflected in a lower purchase price or other favorable terms for the buyer.\n\n4. Gifting the Property: If the property is given away, the recipient would inherit the issue of the outstanding taxes and the impending hypothec. It\u2019s crucial to inform the recipient about this situation.\n\n5. Legal Advice: It is highly advisable to consult with a real estate attorney or legal advisor to understand all implications and ensure that any transaction is handled properly and legally.\n\n6. Paying the Taxes: Resolving the tax debt before the hypothec takes effect can simplify the sale process. If possible, paying the taxes to avoid the hypothec may be the best course of action.\n\nIn summary, while it is possible to sell or give away the property under these circumstances, it requires careful handling to ensure legal compliance and to address the concerns of the buyer or recipient regarding the pending hypothec."]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true

Here are some steps and considerations:\n\n1. Understanding the Hypothec: Clarify the nature of the hypothec. If it's for unpaid taxes unrelated to the property, it's crucial to understand the legal basis for this and whether it adheres to Italian tax and property laws.\n\n2. Consult with a Legal Expert: Engaging a legal expert specializing in Italian property and tax law is essential. They can provide tailored advice based on the specifics of the case and ensure that all actions taken are in compliance with Italian law.\n\n3. Negotiation with Tax Authorities: It might be possible to negotiate with the tax authorities. They may allow for a payment plan or settlement that could delay or remove the hypothec.\n\n4. Selling the Property: While you can technically sell the property, any buyer will need to be informed about the existing hypothec. This will likely complicate the sale, as most buyers will want a clear title. It might be necessary to settle the tax debt from the proceeds of the sale.\n\n5. Transfer of Ownership: Gifting or transferring the property while a hypothec is pending is also possible, but the new owner will inherit the lien. This must be clearly communicated to avoid legal issues.\n\n6. Payment of Taxes: Paying the unpaid taxes might be the most straightforward solution to remove the hypothec. This would clear the lien and simplify any subsequent sale or transfer of the property.\n\n7. Administrative Recourse: If the hypothec is deemed improper or there are errors in its application, you might have grounds to challenge it through administrative or legal recourse. This is another area where legal advice is crucial.\n\n### Steps to Take:\n\n1. Immediate Legal Consultation: Contact a lawyer who specializes in Italian tax and property law.\n2. Review the Tax Notice: Thoroughly review the tax notice to understand the specifics and ensure there are no errors.\n3. Communicate with Authorities: Engage with the tax authorities to negotiate or settle the unpaid taxes.\n4. Disclose to Potential Buyers: If selling, disclose the hypothec to potential buyers and be prepared to address their concerns.\n5. Clear the Debt if Possible: Aim to clear the debt to remove the hypothec and ensure a smooth transaction.\n\nTaking these steps promptly can help manage the situation effectively and avoid further complications."]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true properties. It is due from property owners regardless of whether the property is being used for business purposes.\n- TASI (Tassa sui Servizi Indivisibili): This tax is related to indivisible services provided by the municipality, such as street lighting and road maintenance. It is also applicable to property owners.\n\n### 2. Income Tax on Rental Income\n- If you rent out your commercial property, the rental income is subject to income tax. You must declare this income in your annual tax return, and it will be taxed according to your personal income tax rate.\n\n### 3. VAT (IVA) on Rental Income\n- If the rental income is subject to VAT (IVA), you may be required to charge and remit VAT on the rent received from tenants. This depends on the nature of the lease and the status of the lessee.\n\n### 4. Tax on Property Transfer\n- If you sell the commercial property, there may be taxes on the capital gains from the sale. The gain is typically calculated as the difference between the sale price and the acquisition cost, adjusted for certain expenses and improvements.\n\n### 5. Business Taxes\n- Since you do not run a commercial business, you would not be subject to taxes typically associated with business operations, such as corporate income tax (IRES) or the regional tax on productive activities (IRAP).\n\n### 6. Local Levies and Contributions\n- Depending on the location and the specific regulations of the municipality, there may be other local levies or contributions that apply to property owners.\n\n### 7. Inheritance and Gift Taxes\n- If the commercial property is transferred through inheritance or as a gift, these transactions may be subject to inheritance or gift taxes.\n\n### Summary\nAs the owner of a commercial property not running a business, your primary tax liabilities will include:\n- IMU and TASI: Property-related taxes.\n- Income tax on rental income: If applicable.\n- VAT on rental income: If applicable.\n- Capital gains tax: On the sale of the property.\n\nTo ensure compliance and optimal tax management, it's advisable to consult with a tax professional or legal advisor specializing in Italian tax law. Failure to disclose can result in legal consequences.\n\n2. Clear Title Requirement: For the property to be sold free of any liens, the tax issue must be resolved. Selling your stake without resolving the underlying tax debt will not clear the property of the impending hypothec. The lien would still apply to the property, affecting its title and marketability.\n\n3. Legal Implications: Transferring your ownership to your sister before the hypothec takes effect could potentially be seen as an attempt to avoid paying the taxes. This could lead to legal complications or challenges from tax authorities.\n\n4. Payment of Taxes: The most straightforward way to clear the property of any liens is to pay the outstanding taxes before transferring ownership. Sometimes, errors can occur, and you may not owe as much as indicated.\n- Consult a Tax Professional: A tax professional or accountant can help you review the notices and ensure there are no mistakes in the tax assessments.\n\n### 2. Seek Payment Arrangements\n- Installment Plan (Rateizzazione): You can request to pay your tax debt in installments. The Agenzia delle Entrate (Italian Revenue Agency) allows taxpayers to spread their payments over several months or years, depending on the amount owed and your financial situation.\n- Temporary Suspension (Sospensione Temporanea): In certain cases, you can request a temporary suspension of tax collection due to financial hardship. This is typically granted if you can demonstrate that immediate payment would cause significant financial distress.\n\n### 3. Tax Amnesty Programs\n- Voluntary Disclosure Program (Voluntary Disclosure - "Collaborazione Volontaria"): Occasionally, the Italian government offers tax amnesty programs where taxpayers can come forward to disclose unpaid taxes in exchange for reduced penalties and interest.\n- Debt Settlement (Saldo e Stralcio): This is a form of settlement where the tax authorities agree to accept a lower amount than what is owed. This is typically available in situations of severe financial hardship.\n\n### 4. Legal Advice\n- Legal Assistance: Seek advice from a lawyer who specializes in tax law. They can help you understand your rights and explore options such as contesting the tax debt if there are grounds to do so.\n- Consumer Protection Agencies: Contact consumer protection agencies or tax advisory services that offer free or low-cost legal advice to individuals in financial distress.\n\n### 5. Social Services and Government Assistance\n- Social Services: In extreme cases of financial hardship, social services or welfare programs may offer some relief or assistance.\n- Non-Profit Organizations: Organizations that help individuals with financial or legal issues can also provide guidance and support.\n\n### Steps to Take:\n\n1. Gather Documentation: Collect all relevant documents related to the tax debt, including notices, correspondence, and financial statements.\n2. Consult Professionals: Engage with a tax professional and a lawyer to explore all available options.\n3. Contact Tax Authorities: Reach out to the Agenzia delle Entrate to discuss payment plans, suspensions, or possible settlements.\n4. Explore Assistance Programs: Look into any government or non-profit assistance programs available in your region.\n\n### Summary:\n\nGiven your income and the significant amount of tax debt, seeking professional advice and exploring all available options for payment arrangements, legal recourse, and assistance programs is crucial. Here are a few suggestions to refine and strengthen your introduction:\n\n1. Contextualize the Problem: Begin by framing the broader issue or research question you plan to address in your capstone. How does social media influence public opinion and decision-making? This sets the stage for the specific examples and data you present.\n\n2. Introduce Key Concepts Early: Introduce the concept of "leadership as an influence process" as defined by Northouse (2019) early in the introduction. This will help anchor your discussion on how leadership is exercised through social media.\n\n3. Link Personal Anecdote to Broader Themes: Your fianc\u00e9's distrust and analytical mindset serve as a personal anecdote that contrasts with general public behavior. Clarify how this personal insight leads to a broader examination of social media's influence. This could be a way to discuss critical thinking, media literacy, or leadership theories.\n\n4. Support with Data: The statistics you mention (18% and 55%) are impactful. Make sure to explicitly link them to your research aims. For example, discuss how these figures represent the penetration of social media influence and the potential consequences for democratic processes.\n\n5. Theoretical Framework: Since you mention authentic leadership theory, briefly explain what it entails and how it relates to social media influencers. This could enrich your introduction by providing a theoretical lens through which to view your findings.\n\n6. Thesis Statement: End your introduction with a clear thesis statement that outlines what your capstone will argue or demonstrate. This might involve predicting the implications of social media influence on public behavior, policy, or leadership styles.\n\nHere's a revised snippet for clarity and flow:\n\n---\n"My fianc\u00e9's deep-seated suspicion and resistance to easy influence present a stark contrast to the broader societal trends observed during recent years, particularly regarding the influence of social media. As Peter Northouse articulates in his 2019 exploration of leadership dynamics, leadership fundamentally revolves around influence\u2014a principle starkly observable in the realm of social media. Notably, a substantial segment of the American populace, 18%, reports a significant impact from social media on their voting decisions, while over half, 55%, identify it as their primary news source. These statistics not only underscore the pivotal role of social media in shaping public opinions and decisions but also suggest that social media influencers, through mechanisms of authentic leadership, are crafting a novel paradigm of societal leadership. This capstone project seeks to explore the implications of this shift, focusing on its effects on democratic engagement and public discourse."\n---\n\nThis introduction would set a strong foundation for your capstone, offering both personal insight and broad, research-backed perspectives on an important issue."]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true

He does not trust easily and always looks beyond what people say to determine what they mean. Consequently, he is very hard to manipulate and very hard to influence, and as such, he is very hard to lead; he prefers to be in charge. Therefore, he is skilled in convincing people. He knows how to influence others and lead people because, as Northouse (2019) asserts, leadership is an influence process.\n\nUnlike my fianc\u00e9, a significant portion of the population does not delve deeply into the authenticity of the information they receive; 18% of Americans report that social media has a large impact on their voting decisions, and 55% consider it their primary news source, according to a 2019 study. This widespread influence of social media raises a compelling question about the nature of leadership in the digital era. Building on Northouse's definition, I intend to argue that the influence exerted by social media can be seen as a form of authentic leadership. This form of leadership, practiced by social media influencers, aligns closely with authentic leadership theory, which emphasizes transparency, ethics, and a focus on the communal good. These influencers, through their pervasive reach and often personal engagement with followers, craft a modern narrative of leadership that significantly shapes public opinions and societal values."", "request_id": "8a1d89c36ec90e57-

Please review the requirements for each section thoroughly.\n\nIn chapters one through three, you worked to define and describe a field/topic/problem that deserves your attention that carries social\nsignificance. You looked at what has been done both in theory and practice through the research in your literature review. With these\nchapters and your conversations with your faculty member in mind, carefully craft a narrative that addresses the change you want to\nmake or bring.\n\nSolution\n\nFirst, explain briefly what this change is and why you want to see this change take place. If you see research question(s) are appropriate\nfor your project, please write it/them. This section will include 3-5 pages that provides the process of the solution you propose to\nimplement. This section must include research explaining why this solution is the best course of action. Examples may include: training,\nwebsite, blog, Wiki page, social media campaign, evaluation process and rubric, organizational philosophy, mission/vision/values\nstatement, course syllabus, webinar,\netc.\n\nEffective Date: 08/30/2023. \u00a9 Copyright 2023 Claremont Lincoln University. This may\ninclude: video, powerpoint, training manual, quizzes, handouts, links, etc. This is a substantial portion of your project and these\nmaterials should address how your solution will be implemented in your organization from start to finish.\n\nProject Measurements\n\nIn this section, you will have to describe what you are measuring in your solution to provide results. In the design of your project plan,\nyou may want to think about how you can measure successes/failures of your proposed solution. Once you have determined what to\nmeasure, you will have to explain how you will measure them. Like the section above, you are the expert in your project; explain why you\nchose to measure what you want to measure and the methods with which you are measuring your project\u2019s outcome. The expectation for students is to spend approximately\n16-17 hours per week per course participating in the discussions and completing the readings and assignments. Plan accordingly to\nfinish course readings and assignments by the specified due dates.\n\nCredit Hour Policy\nA 3 unit course includes work that reasonably approximates (1) not less than 6 hours of classroom or direct faculty instruction\nand 10 hours of out-of-class student work each week for a 8-week term; or (2) at least an equivalent amount of work as required\nabove through other academic activities as established by Claremont Lincoln University leading to the award of credit hours.\n\nProfessional Communication\nCivility and respect for the opinions of others are necessary in a diverse, academic environment. While students may not always\nagree with the ideas and opinions shared by others, courteous behavior and responses are expected. When disagreeing, students\nshould make a distinction between criticizing an idea and criticizing a person. Access to a wide variety of experiences and\nviewpoints helps unlock innovation and leadership potential.\n\nRespecting one another's individual differences is critical in transforming a collection of diverse individuals into an inclusive,\ncollaborative, and innovative learning community. Our commitment to the Claremont Core\u00ae shapes our expectation for\ncommunication, dialogue, and collaboration.\n\nWith this in mind, Claremont Lincoln University expects students to adhere to the following:\n\n\u25cf \u2009Use of inclusive language that shows awareness and appreciation of differences such as in gender, race/ethnicity, culture,\nbackground, and ability.\n\n\u25cf Use of professional conduct and language in communication with peers, faculty, and staff including in the discussion boards,\nemail messages, Zoom meetings, Canvas messaging, and other communication platforms. Be aware of context and audience. For\nexample, use of \u201call caps\u201d may imply shouting in written communication.\n\n\u25cf \u2009Respectful communication practices in all situations. While differences of opinion may occur, combative, insulting, offensive,\nderogatory, or threatening language is prohibited and may trigger a Code of Conduct warning or sanction.\n\n\u25cf \u2009Student work submitted in the discussion boards or other venues is considered private and should not be shared outside of the\nclassroom environment.\n\nAcademic Honesty\nPlagiarism is literary theft or offering the words or ideas of another as if they were one\u2019s own, with no acknowledgment of the\nsource. Whenever the ideas or words used are taken from a source, this source must be given credit. This applies not only\nto\u2009direct quotations, but also to indirect quotations (in which the original statement is paraphrased). Sources that must be\ngiven\u2009credit include published books, journals, magazines, newspapers, etc., as well as other types of media (such as Internet\nsources, film, video, television, radio, audio recordings, and other electronic resources, as well as lectures and the work of other\nstudents). The principle also holds true for less direct borrowings, if the ideas in question are distinctive to the source as\nopposed to being considered common currency. This is often a matter of judgment; when in doubt, students are advised to err on\nthe side of giving too many citations, rather than too few. The prohibition of plagiarism applies to dissertations, theses, projects,\nterm papers, class reports, take-home examinations, and any other work (whether in writing or in another media for\ncommunicating ideas) intended \u2009 to fulfill requirements for a class or degree program.\n\nThe University recognizes that plagiarism is culturally defined.

Consequently, students not experienced in the U.S. educational\nsystem may be asked to rewrite plagiarized work without the assumption of dishonest intent on the student\u2019s part. Nevertheless,\nunder no circumstances is plagiarized work acceptable, and all students are expected to learn what constitutes plagiarism in the\nU.S. educational context.\n\nCheating involves the use of any kind of assistance (e.g., written, oral, aural, visual, or artificial intelligence [AI]\u2009e.g.\u2009ChatGPT)\nthat has not been specifically authorized. Students are not to receive assistance from others with their coursework unless it has\n\nEffective Date: 08/30/2023. \u00a9 Copyright 2023 Claremont Lincoln University. If there are general questions from which all students would benefit (about assignments, readings, etc.) please\npost the general questions in the \u201cQuestions for your Instructor\u201d discussion thread. If there is a private message for the instructor,\nplease use the \u201cmessages\u201d function within the course module. In addition it served as a platform for ordinary people to share their views and reactions during a time of uncertainty and unrest. Most notably TikTok the social media platform where users post short videos lip-singing and dancing rose to prominence.\nHowever throughout this time TikTok and other social media platforms became more than just a means for people to connect and express themselves. It also became the focal point and catalyst to demonstrations across the nation. During this period incendiary and inspirational hashtags such as \u2018#stopthesteal\u2019 and \u2018#sayhername\u2019 took center stage and entered the public vernacular. \nSocial media activism\u2014long looked down upon as lazy and ineffectual\u2014 suddenly became the vehicle activists used to recruit and organize. For example it\u2019s noted that many of the participants of the January 6th 2021 capital insurrection first tweeted or posted videos on Youtube promoting the January 6 demonstration that devolved into a riot (Atlantic Council\u2019s DFRLab 2021). At the time many political pundits argued that the January 6th insurrection occurred because of incendiary statements made both online and in-person by then President Donald Trump (Heilweil & Ghaffary 2021; \u201cTrump Impeached\u201d 2021). Later former President Trump would even be prosecuted impeached and banned from social media platforms for inciting the January 6th riot.\nIt\u2019s clear that social media influences and other online public figures hold tremendous sway over public opinion and attitudes in current times. Today one need never leave home to influence the attitude and practices of the public at large. Thus it begs the question \u2018Has social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 gotten a bad rap?\u2019 Is it possible to start a movement and effect positive change with a couple of keystrokes and a vision?\nI believe the answer to those questions is yes. If I could gather foremost experts on topics relevant to the subject together to discuss it at a cocktail party I feel confident they also would reach the same conclusion. Indeed suppose one were to examine the scope of their research. In that case one might find support for my assertion and further evidence of how social media influence or thought leadership influences and motivates the actions of the public at large.\nFor example my first guest would certainly be Peter Guy Northouse. Northouse\u2019s textbooks on leadership explore various leadership theories and provide several case studies for each application. In his research and writing Northouse (2019) displays a thorough understanding of the mechanics of how different kinds of leaders influence followers thinking and behavior (Northouse 2019 2021). If one wanted to elucidate and compare how the qualities exhibited by social media activists resembled and matched those of other prominent leaders and activists in history Northouse\u2019s research would be the best starting point. One need only delve into the research of Northouse to discover the primary qualities traits and approaches utilized by leaders.\nFor instance Northouse\u2019s 2019 book titled Leadership: theory and practice begins by discussing the dissonance between scholars about the meaning of leadership. Northouse (2019) also explores the history of leadership theory in the modern age. Northouse (2019) then defines leadership as \u201ca process whereby an individual influences a group of individuals to achieve a common goal\u201d (p. 43).\nOf the varied leadership descriptions available Northouse\u2019s definition of leadership aligns most with my thinking philosophy and research. Through all his case studies and descriptions of modern leadership theories and approaches he reveals how one needs only to have influence and lead followers toward a common goal to be a leader. As one may be influenced through many avenues over-simplifying leadership into an influence process allows many people who occupy non-traditional or new societal roles of influence to be considered leaders.\nHowever Northouse (2019) also asserts that \u201cit is the leader who often initiates the relationship creates the communication linkages and carries the burden for maintaining the relationship\u201d (p. 44). This assertion leads me to the second guest of my cocktail party. In order to discuss the mechanisms by which one could gain followers and initiate a meaningful and influential relationship with persons merely through how they present themselves and their ideas it seems that I would need a scholar knowledgeable about authentic leadership theory and practices. Thus my next guest would be author and university lecturer Bas W. Blekkingh.\nIn a book titled Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission Blekkingh (2015) presents a seven-layer model for achieving authenticity. More importantly Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) seven-layer model illustrates how authentic leaders can solve problems and influence others by identifying their own purpose. Moreover Blekkingh (2015) asserts that \u201cAuthentic Leadership amounts to \u2018exerting influence with your mission in mind in a genuine and reliable way\u2019\u201d (p. 149). Blekkingh\u2019s assertions and the subject of his book overall provide an answer to how social media influences may serve as authentic leaders in society and guide others toward a particular philosophy or way of thinking.\nHowever next I would want guests at my cocktail party whose research presented further data to support my claim. This guest\u2019s research would contain prior studies or statistical data collected that reflected the literary body of work of which my research would be an addition. Consequently the next guest invited to my hypothetical cocktail party would be an Instructor at Grant MacEwan College and the University of Alberta Shelly Boulianne.\nBoulianne\u2019s (2009) research titled \u201cDoes Internet Use Affect Engagement? A MetaAnalysis of Research\u201d initially published in the Political Communication journal meets these criteria perfectly. Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis of 38 studies examining the correlation between internet use and political engagement provides concrete evidence of the role of the internet in political engagement. Boulianne (2009) asserted there was \u201crelatively little research on the relationship between Internet use and political engagement\u201d at publication (p. 295). However Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis bridged a gap in the literature and was able to show on an aggregate level the positive effect of internet use on civic engagement. Boulianne (2009) concluded that:\nIn this analysis of 38 studies and 166 effects testing the relationship between Internet use and political engagement the meta-data establish that there is little evidence to support the argument that Internet use is contributing to civic decline. The findings suggest that the effect of Internet use on engagement is positive. (p. 205)\nBoulianne\u2019s (2009) data and research serve as an essential link proving the potential for social media activism to affect public opinion and behavior. \n\tFinally the last guest I would invite to round out the discussion of whether social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 can result in positive social change is Henrik S. Christensen. As a scholar published author and doctoral candidate at the Department of Political Science at \u00c5bo Akademi University in Turku Finland Christensen\u2019s (2011) article offers a valued perspective on slactivism. In addition the author\u2019s research is relevant to my topic and represents part of the body of literature I would hope one day includes my research. \n\tIn a 2011 article titled \u201cPolitical activities on the Internet: Slacktivism or political participation by other means?\u201d initially published in the online academic journal First Monday Christensen (2011) discusses the societal implications of online activism and political engagement. Christensen (2011) cites and summarizes prior research devoted to the topic to reach a conclusion and answer the problem statement expressed in his introduction. In the article Christensen (2011) concludes that \u201ceven if it is not possible to dismiss the skepticism about the effectiveness of online participation it is premature to dismiss the impact of the Internet on political activism altogether\u201d (para. 60).\n\t Christensen\u2019s article explored prior research studies and presented data that either supported or challenged his idea. Christensen\u2019s article also reflected on and analyzed the arguments presented by other scholars to explain current societal behaviors. Thus in addition to Christensen\u2019s (2011) article being significantly relevant to my research topic it also represents an example of the kind of research product I wish my capstone project to be.\nMoreover each of my chosen cocktail party guest\u2019s work reflects on or further develops a particular aspect of the mechanics and significance of social media activism. Therefore I will likely refer to and cite their work in my capstone project. At the completion of my capstone project I hope that through exploring the research of others and extracting data about public opinion I will have proved the significance of online activism. In addition there is a gap in the literature that describes the role of authentic leadership in social media influence. Therefore my capstone project would prove and explain how one can affect positive change by living authentically and sharing your ideas or concerns online. \nIn modern society a tweet isn\u2019t just a tweet. In today\u2019s world interspersed between fun dancing and lip-syncing videos real issues affecting the community at large are being addressed. On TikTok people raise concerns comment on social issues and invite humanity to change for the better. The pandemic and other recent events have spotlighted how online activism can affect and direct offline public action. Going forward it is virtually indisputable that social media personalities and influencers have a tremendous platform that they can use to shape public perception of events and start a movement. By raising awareness of the significance of online influence I hope that people will take online platforms seriously and be cautious not to promote ideas and actions detrimental to society.\nReferences\nAtlantic Council\u2019s DFRLab. While Milano was not the originator of the phrase coined by activist Tarana Burke in 2006 Milano\u2019s tweet to her then three million-plus subscribers garnered thousands of responses overnight (Thomson 2018). Suddenly women who had suffered in silence\u2014sometimes even for years\u2014suddenly began to speak out about their experiences. Other victims bolstered and emboldened by what was becoming a culture of accountability for sexual harassment and assault perpetrators began to seize personal agency and confront their tormentors through official channels. \nThus what began as a mere tweet became a model for social media activism in the current age. Although the pandemic has affected society\u2019s primary modes of communication in past times social media activism or \u2018slacktivism\u2019 was looked down upon as lazy and ineffectual (Thomson 2018). However recent events such as the #MeToo movement might prompt one to reexamine long-held opinions on the topic. As more and more significant events driven by online activities occur one might question: Has slacktivism gotten a bad rap? Do we underestimate the leadership power of online influencers? Is social media influence an example of authentic leadership?\nAside from the #MeToo movement social media has been the purview and catalytic agent in many other social and political activities. For example many see organizer Alicia Garza\u2019s 2013 Facebook post containing the phrase \u2018black lives matter\u2019 as well as her friend and fellow organizer Patrisse Cullors\u2019 subsequently sharing that post with the hashtag #BlackLivesMatter as a pivotal moment in the modern civil rights movement era (Guynn 2015). Moreover even before the #MeToo and #BlackLivesMatter movements Facebook was largely credited as a critical element in the 2011 Egyptian revolution (Vargas 2012).\nAdditionally corporations and other organizations have long acknowledged the impact of social media influencers and other online personalities on the general populace. Consequently many businesses and non-profit organizations partner with social-media influences to market their products or causes utilizing the power notoriety or fame of these social media figures (Anderson 2020). However although it is acknowledged that social media personalities have a tremendous platform that lends them a large audience to influence and share ideas with there is little research about the leadership function they fill in society. \nAccording to a 2021 Pew Research Center survey approximately seven in ten Americans use social media (Auxier & Anderson 2021). In addition 81% of survey participants report using the social media platform Youtube and 69% say they use Facebook (Pew Research Center 2021). While the data indicates that Americans utilize and engage with Social Media platforms it is still unclear to what degree social media influencers lead and affect the attitudes of the general populace. With the growing popularity and impact of social media use it\u2019s vital to gain a deeper perspective on the depth of influence social media platforms have to harness that power for good.\nA phenomenological study into the leadership role of social media influencers in modern society could illuminate the extent to which they guide societal attitudes and opinions. According to Tracy (2019) \u201cPhenomenology is the reflective study of pre\u2010reflective experience concerned with how people consciously experience specific phenomena things or stuff. Similar to grounded theory phenomenology does not specify or closely delineate what it expects to find in the study (p. 65). Accordingly this research will explore the relationship between online influence and authentic leadership utilizing an emic methodology where \u201cbehavior is described from the actor\u2019s point of view and is context\u2010specific\u201d (p. 26). However the primary purpose or goal of the phenomenological study will be to examine the significance and impact of social media personalities as authentic and thought leaders across various social media user age groups.\nAccording to Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) an emergent research design infers that the initial plan is fluid and that \u201csome or all phases of the process may change or shift after the researcher enters the field and begins to collect data\u2026the questions may change the forms of data collection may shift and the individuals studied may be modified (p. 259). Likewise the methodologies used during the research project may change. Moreover Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) advise that \u2018the idea behind qualitative research is to purposefully select participants or sites (or documents or visual material) that will best help the researcher understand the problem and the research question\u201d (p. 262). Hence I plan to gather data through three sources or data gathering methodologies.\nFirst I plan to curate a group of approximately four interview subjects. The subjects will represent four age ranges the Pew research survey data focuses on to correlate my findings better. I will also interview at least one social media personality with a significant following of 100000 users or more. In addition I will prepare a release form and gain the consent of all participants to use their personal details or for their varying levels of participation i.e. video audio recordings political affiliations etc. \nNext I will use the data from several annual Pew Research Center surveys on the social media platform use of adults in America. While I had considered preparing my own survey the data I wish to examine already exists and such an action would not be an efficient use of my time and efforts. In addition there are also several Gallup polls whose raw data I plan to use in research pursuits.\nAccording to Cresswell and Cresswell (2018) one category of qualitative data consists of \u201cqualitative audiovisual and digital materials (including social media materials). This data may take the form of photographs art objects videotapes website main pages e-mails text messages social media text or any forms of sound\u201d (p. 267). Thus I will also explore social-media platforms such as TikTok Youtube Reddit etc. to observe and examine whether social-media influencers actively engage in the behaviors that model or align with authentic leadership theory principles. My observations will likely inform the interview questions I prepare for study participants. \nMoreover Tracy (2019) asserts that fieldwork or participant witnessing \u201callows researchers to examine participants\u2019 actions as a means to understanding their values\u201d (p. 78). Exploring audio-visual and written materials on social media platforms like Twitter TikTok and Facebook are most akin to \u2018fieldwork\u2019 in the context of this project. Thus the observations or \u2018participant witnessing\u2019 that I engage in will help me discern the values and in turn the participants\u2019 authenticity and leadership or followership qualities.\nTo paint a clear picture of the relationship between social media influence and authentic leadership I would first review the written works of several writers and scholars in the field of authentic leadership. For example Peter G. Northouse is a Western Michigan University professor and writer of several books on leadership (Northouse 2019). Northouse\u2019s (2019) book titled Leadership: theory and practice begins by defining leadership. Northouse (2019) asserts that \u201cLeadership is a process whereby an individual influences a group of individuals to achieve a common goal\u201d (p. 43). Northouse (2019) then explores the history of leadership theory from the early 20th century onward. Each chapter onward then discusses a particular leadership theory or approach. \nIn chapter 9 Northouse (2019) gives an in-depth description of authentic leadership. He begins by claiming that:\nAuthentic leadership represents one of the newer areas of leadership research. It focuses on whether leadership is genuine and \u201creal.\u201d As the title of this approach implies authentic leadership is about the authenticity of leaders and their leadership\u2026 authentic leadership is still in the formative phase of development. As a result authentic leadership needs to be considered more tentatively: It is likely to change as new research about the theory is published (p. 308).\nNorthouse (2019) also describes the origins of authentic leadership and offers a rationale for its emerging popularity. However as asserted by Northouse authentic leadership theory is in its nascent stages so its application is not as readily recognizable. Even so Northouse (2019) clarifies and defines authentic leadership and its approaches within the chapter. Additionally Northouse also acknowledges the need for further research into authentic leadership theory. Therefore Northouse\u2019s general framework will be a helpful resource while studying the relationship between social media influence and authentic leadership.\nBlekkingh\u2019s (2015) and Wulffers\u2019 (2017) writing also provide insight into authentic leadership practices. For instance Blekkingh\u2019s (2015) book Authentic Leadership: Discover and Live Your Essential Mission explores authentic leadership practices while providing a guiding framework towards discovering one\u2019s purpose and achieving authenticity. In comparison while also equally relevant Wulffers\u2019 (2017) book titled Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching Approach provided critical insight into the mechanisms of authentic leadership while contending that authenticity is a spectrum. Wulffers\u2019 (2017) book is particularly pertinent as the writer examines the methodologies and components of authentic leadership development while also showing ample examples of authentic leaders in the public sphere.\nAfter using prior literature to shape the narrative and define my concept of authentic leadership I would also like to review the work of other scholars examining the effects of the internet and social media use in the modern age. For example Boulianne\u2019s (2009) meta-analysis of prior studies done examining the relationship between internet use and political engagement is an ideal starting point to chart the trajectory of the effects of society\u2019s burgeoning social media use. In addition Boulianne (2009) concluded that \u201cthe meta-data establish that there is little evidence to support the argument that Internet use is contributing to civic decline. The findings suggest that the effect of Internet use on engagement is positive\u201d (p. 205). Booulianne\u2019s (2009) analysis shows a clear relationship between online and offline engagement. Hence one could use Bouliane\u2019s research as a provocation to learn more about the specific relationship between social media use and influence.\nHowever internet and social media use and online activism are not synonymous. Thus Christensen\u2019s (2011) article titled \u201cPolitical activities on the Internet: Slacktivism or political participation by other means?\u201d discussing the implications of and incentives to engaging in online activism give a critical alternate perspective on the question of whether social media personalities practice authentic leadership. Throughout the article Christensen (2011) synthesized and examined prior research for and against his central hypothesis. Christensen\u2019s (2011) conclusion that online activities promote offline participation suggests that online influence has a more significant effect on offline behavior than many studies have shown. Ultimately Christensen\u2019s article contextualizes the data from previous research referenced in ways that facilitate further analysis based on the article\u2019s premises and its references. \nFinally Anderson and Auxier\u2019s (2021) online article for the Pew Research Center website about social media use provides a starting point for the survey\u2019s data analysis. The article titled \u201cSocial Media Use in 2021\u201d summarizes the results of Pew Research Center\u2019s annual survey on American social media use. In the article Anderson and Auxier (2021) present the survey results to support their conclusions drawn from the survey data. However as Anderson and Auxier do not use the data to support claims of either causation or correlation their findings function more as commentary to the data presented. The article\u2019s central idea is \u201ca majority of Americans say they use YouTube and Facebook while use of Instagram Snapchat and TikTok is especially common among adults under 30\u201d (Anderson & Auxier 2021 para. 1). In the scope of my research the article primarily functions as a prompt to further examine the data and determine correlation or causation through my own findings.\nUltimately my reflexivity influences and informs this research project. I am an avid user of social media across multiple platforms. I am aware that I am open to the influence of social media personalities and thus am likely to modify some aspects of my life based on their recommendation. More importantly I have on multiple occasions changed my attitude toward a particular concept idea or even a political candidate and ideology because of views and opinions expressed by social media personalities. \nMoreover I do not think that I am in the minority. Most social media users are also influenced by what they read hear and see. Nonetheless regardless of what I may anticipate finding I am eager to research this topic to discover the thoughts and opinions of others and learn how they experience social media activism and engagement. \nHowever it seems to me that scholars have largely ignored the impact power influence and leadership abilities of social media creators to mobilize large groups of people towards a common goal. I feel passionate that it is essential to learn understand and raise awareness of the significance of social media content creators in shaping public attitudes and behaviors. I hope that my research could inspire scholars and educators to take social media platforms more seriously and reflect on what ideas they choose to convey and prompt further research into this area.\n\nReferences\nAnderson C. He examines and critiques common approaches and ideas held in the academic community regarding authentic leadership theory. The author goes on to summarize and discuss current approaches to authentic leadership development. Berkovich (2010) identifies and discusses the central focus \u2018narrative identity processing\u2019 and \u2018dramaturgical enactment\u2019 of two of the foremost didactic methods for authentic leadership development. He then suggests a new perspective based in dialogical philosophy and sets about describing a proposed framework for dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership. Berkovich (2010) identifies eight areas of dialogical pedagogy which are useful in authentic leadership development: care contact critical thinking empathy mutuality open-mindedness respect and self-exposure. Finally the article evaluates and critiques the use and outcomes of using dialogical pedagogy in authentic leadership development initiatives.\n\tThe source was useful in that the author first defined his view of the current perspectives in authentic leadership before exploring a new perspective. The author discusses the foundations and mechanics of dialogical pedagogy in an in-depth manner which is helpful in understanding the overall purpose and ideas set forth in the article. http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspxdirect=true&db=nlebk&AN=987184&site=ehost-live\nThis e-book explores the ideas present in authentic leadership theory with the intent to use them as a tool for discovering ones purpose. Blekkingh (2015) approaches his topic through a seven layer model which he postulates is the framework of all human beings. These seven layers in chapter discussion order are: environment behavior skills norms ego values and authenticity. The initial seven chapters are each focused on one of these layers and the problems associated with each layer. Blekkingh (2015) suggests that through this layered self reflection one is enabled to find their authentic self and their purpose. He presents the idea that this once an individual is aware of their authentic self and purpose they will be able to \u201cput Authentic Leadership into effect\u201d (Blekkingh 2015 p. x). Finally he concludes the book with resources for further exploration and includes a lengthy appendix that functions as kind of encyclopedia with supplemental materials.\n\tThe author is a credible source in the field of authentic leadership theory due to his work as both an authentic leadership lecturer at a Dutch university and as one of the founders of a consultancy firm centered around the tenets of authentic leadership. One failing of the book as Authentic Leadership resource is that many of the examples in the book are mainly anecdotal and lack an academic or scientific robustness. In contrast the authors simple language and engaging exercises make his ideas and pedagogy easily understood and applicable to anyone.\nGardner W. L. Avolio B. J. Luthans F. May D. R. & Walumbwa F. (2005) contend that \u201cthe purpose of this article is to further develop and extend an emerging theory of authentic leadership development\u201d (p. 344). The authors begin by defining their interpretation of the constructs of authenticity authentic leadership and authentic followership. Gardner et al (2005) then discuss a conceptual authentic leadership framework for leader and follower development. Gardner et al (2005) propose what they describe as a \u201cself-based model of the developmental processes for authentic leadership and followership\u201d (p. 348). This model sets forth the idea that a leader\u2019s personal history is the catalyst for authentic leadership development (Gardner et al. 2005). The authors identify self-awareness and self-regulation as two fundamental components of authentic leadership development and they discuss both these concepts in depth. Also at the heart of this article is the idea that authentic leaders are positive role models for followers and consistently model authentic behavior balanced processing self-awareness and transparency.\n\tThis article is a valuable resource in examining authentic leadership theory because it examines authentic leadership development using a reflective perspective which looks at the roles of both the leader and follower. The authors also clearly and succinctly define the various components of their authentic leadership model. One area for critique is that the authors don\u2019t provide any concrete examples of the outcomes they predict making the subject matter of the article entirely theoretical. \nHsieh C.-C. & Wang D.-S. The study focuses on the influence of authentic leadership on employee trust and engagement from a supervisor-employee perspective. Hsieh & Wang (2015) made four distinct hypothesis concerning employee and supervisor perceptions of authentic leadership and its mediatory relationship with employee trust and engagement. The study sample was taken from the responses of 77 supervisors and 345 employees from 36 of Taiwan\u2019s best performing companies (Hsieh & Wang 2015). The results of the study were quantified using study participants questionnaire responses which were then converted to statistical data and applied to a hierarchical linear model. Using this data the authors were able to conclude that \u201csupervisor-perceived authentic leadership has a fully mediating influence on employee work engagement through employee trust\u201d (Hsieh & Wang 2015 p. 2341).\n\tThis study is a valuable resource for authentic leadership theory because of its use of statistical data. The presentation of quantifiable results gives greater credibility to the authors\u2019 conclusions. Hsieh & Wang\u2019s (2015) presentation of their authentic leadership research hypothesis test and findings present a clear picture of the application of authentic leadership and its probable outcomes.\nKerfoot K. Kerfoot (2006) presents the idea that leader authenticity cannot be self-defined it lies only in the perception of followers. The author also suggests that authenticity may be a character trait but then postulates that through mentoring and confidence one can create the perception of authenticity as a leader (Kerfoot 2006).\n\tThis composition clearly defines the author\u2019s idea of authentic leadership and its importance. While the article does state several arguable conjectures they are all supported by the cited references from other credible sources. This article is relevant and helpful to any authentic leadership research in that it gives context to\u2014and an application of\u2014authentic leadership theory in a specific profession.\nMehmood Q. Specifically the study examined the role of authentic leadership on employees developmental goals and the correlation between supervisor authentic leadership and employee performance (Mehmood et al. 2016). The authors put forth three distinct hypothesis which predict that authentic leadership positively predicts followers learning goal orientation and indirectly positively predicts followers performance and engagement. The study sample of participants included 115 supervisors and 345 employees in the Pakistani Telecommunications sector (Mehmood et al. 2016). Similar to the study conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) a questionnaire and statistical data was used to quantify the results. Mehmood et al. (2016) were able to conclude there is \u201cevidence that authentic leadership predicts followers' in\u2010role performance and civic virtue extra\u2010role performance through followers' LGO\u201d (p. 882).\n\tThis article is a credible source due to being published as part of peer-reviewed scholarly journal. Additionally the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors conclusions. One criticism of this source is that it does not discuss much of the research that the authors conducted in authentic leadership theory before they arrived at their hypothesis. The authors site an extensive list of credible sources from which they formulated their ideas but it may have been helpful for them to be more in-depth. \nQian J. Yang F. & Han Z. R. (2016). This composition describes how authentic leadership and employees\u2019 cognitive and emotive perspectives influence feedback-seeking behaviors. Qian et al. (2016) argue \u201cthat authentic leadership influences feedback seeking indirectly through employees\u2019 perceptions about value and cost\u201d (p.4 82). They also put forth a model where authentic leadership correlates with employee positive emotions thereby indirectly fostering feedback-seeking behavior (Qian et al. 2016).\n\tThe article provides a focused view of authentic leadership and how it correlates with feedback-seeking behaviors. The authors cite an extensive amount of credible sources and literature to support their claims but at times this may cause a reader to get the sense that they\u2019re not putting forth any new ideas. One criticism of the composition is that due to its focused view some portions of the article seem almost redundant.\nRego A. Vit\u00f3ria A. Magalh\u00e3es A. Ribeiro N. & e Cunha M. P. (2013). Are authentic leaders \tassociated with more virtuous committed and potent teams? The Leadership Quarterly 24(1) \t61\u201379. <LINK> https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2012.08.002\nThis peer-reviewed article concerns a study which examines how authentic leadership predicts team potency both directly and indirectly. Rego et al. (2013) suggests that authentic leadership alone \u201cis not sufficient to achieve positive team outcomes\u201d (p. 62). The authors assert that team affective commitment and team virtuousness may also be a link between authentic leadership and team potency. Therefore the study also explores the mediatory role of team affective commitment and virtuousness. The study was conducted at a Portuguese university with 59 teams of sizes ranging from 4-21 members. Similar to the study conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) as well as Mehmood et al. (2016) a questionnaire and statistical data was used to quantify the results. Rogo et al. (2013) were able to conclude that \u201cthe findings suggest that AL [authentic leadership] predicts team potency via the mediating role of team virtuousness and team affective commitment\u201d (p. 75).\n\tMany of the studies which concern themselves with the effects of authentic leadership focus on individual follower outcomes. This study is rare in that is examines the effects of authentic leadership on group outcomes. This rarity makes it an exceptional resource for authentic leadership theory research. The authors described the concepts of authentic leadership which lead to their hypothesis in detail which provided ample supplementary information on their study topic. As with the studies conducted by Hsieh & Wang (2015) as well as Mehmood et al. (2016) the presentation of quantifiable results lends greater credibility to the authors conclusions. \nShapira-Lishchinsky O. (2014). The study found that there were 2 main advantages of TBSs: TBSs create a supportive environment to learn from participant mistakes and TBSs heightened educational leader awareness of their caring responsibilities. Shapira-Lishchinsky (2014) was able to conclude that TBSs provide a framework for ethical discussion but did not ever establish a firm correlation between authentic leadership development in educational leaders and TBSs.\n\tAlthough this study is peer reviewed its results were not presented in the form of quantifiable data. While the study did include detailed research relating to authentic leadership and also clearly stated its methodology ultimately it is not the best resource for the study of authentic leadership theory. It does however provide ample information and examples which could be correlated with authentic leadership theory through conjecture and deduction.\nWulffers T. (2017). Authentic Leadership Effectiveness for Individuals and Teams: A Coaching \tApproach. KR Publishing; eBook Collection (EBSCOhost). \t <LINK> http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=1595178&site=ehost-live\nWullffers (2017) begins by commenting on the state of leadership today and also examining the consequences of poor leadership. The author cites authentic leadership theory as a key method for achieving a better quality of leadership. Wullffers (2017) states that \u201cauthentic leaders are leaders who know who they are and who are true to themselves\u201d (p. 7). The book examines what authentic leadership is from a scholarly perspective and cites multiple literary works concerning the mechanisms of authentic leadership. The author then examines the components and methodologies of authentic leadership development. Wullffers (2017) describes leader authenticity as a spectrum with \u201cleadership development levels of maturity that shape the moral and cognitive capacities\u201d (p. 57) of leaders. The author then goes on to discuss how leaders may navigate up developmental levels. Finally Wulffers (2017) examines well known leaders through the lens of authentic leadership (p. 208).\n\tWhile the author does make some assertions this book functions mainly as an extended case study and detailed manual on how to achieve leader authenticity. The author heavily references previous literature on authentic leadership theory as well as her own experiences to formulate her ideas. The book includes several appendices and end-notes which enhance its usefulness in authentic leadership theory research. Wullffers is also lent a greater credibility through endorsements and reviews by industry leaders.\n\n\n\n\t\n\n\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2005.03.001""]\n[URL: "direct=true&db=bsh&AN=96695857&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: "direct=true&db=nlebk&AN=987184&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=17426678&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=108302656&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=108302656&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: "live""]\n[URL: ""http://search.ebscohost.com/login.aspx?direct=true&db=bsh&AN=119180634&site=ehost-live""]\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1007/s12144-015-9316-z""]\n[URL: ""https://doi.org/10.1016/j.leaqua.2012.08.002""]\n[URL: """"]\n[URL:

Roma Capitale guarantees that the processing of your personal data takes place in compliance with fundamental rights and freedoms, as well as your dignity, with particular reference to confidentiality, personal identity, and the right to the protection of personal data.\n\n1. Data Controller of Personal Data (Art. 13.1.a Regulation 679/2016/EU)\n\n The Data Controller of personal data is Roma Capitale. As of today's date, all information regarding the Data Controller, along with the updated list of System Administrators and Data Processors, is available at Palazzo Senatorio, via del Campidoglio 1, 00186 Rome; PEC: protocollo.gabinettosindaco@pec.comune.roma.it.\n\n2. Data Protection Officer (DPO) / Responsible for Data Protection (RPD) (Art. 13.1.b Regulation 679/2016/EU)\n\n The Responsible for Data Protection (Data Protection Officer - \u201cDPO\u201d) of Roma Capitale is reachable at the following email address: dpo@comune.roma.it\n\n3. Purpose of Personal Data Processing (Art. 13.1.c Regulation 679/2016/EU)\n\n All personal data of the interested parties, and potentially those belonging to particular categories under art. 9 of the EU Regulation or related to criminal convictions and offenses pursuant to art. 10 of the EU Regulation, are processed by the Data Controller based on one or more of the following legality assumptions:\n\n - to fulfill obligations established by laws, regulations, community legislation, and for the performance of institutional functions (article 6.1.c Regulation 679/2016/EU);\n - to perform a task of public interest connected to the exercise of public powers (article 6.1.e, article 9.2.g Regulation 679/2016/EU).\n\n Listed are the purposes for which the personal data of the Interested Party will be processed:\n\n - insertion into the Capitoline registries and databases;\n - management and maintenance of the current demographic database;\n - management of activities related to demographic, registry, and civil status services;\n - management and maintenance of civil status acts and registers, the registry, and issuance of certifications, issuance of identification documents;\n - issuance of cemetery concessions and authorizations for cremation, custody, and scattering of ashes;\n - issuance of burial and interment authorizations, and issuance of so-called privileged interment authorizations and mortuary passports;\n - carrying out the activities of mortuary police within competence;\n - management and maintenance of the lists of people's judges;\n - management and maintenance of the military draft;\n - correspondence management;\n - processing of internal statistics;\n - fulfilling specific requests.\n\n4. Methods of Personal Data Processing\n\n Your personal data is processed at the premises and offices of the Data Controller or, if necessary, at the subjects indicated in paragraph 6, using both paper and computer supports, by telephone and telematic means, also through automated tools suitable for storing, managing, and transmitting the data themselves, with the observance of every precautionary measure that guarantees security and confidentiality. The processing will be developed to minimize the risk of destruction or loss, unauthorized access, or processing not in accordance with the purposes of data collection. Your personal data is processed:\n\n - in compliance with the principle of minimization, pursuant to articles 5.1.c and 25.2 of Regulation 679/2016/EU;\n - lawfully and fairly.\n\n Your data is collected:\n\n - for explicit and legitimate purposes;\n - accurate and, if necessary, updated;\n - relevant, complete, and not excessive concerning the purposes of the processing.\n\n5. Nature of the Data Collection and Consequences of Possible Failure to Provide Personal Data (Art. 13.2.e Regulation 679/2016/EU)\n\n The provision of your personal data is mandatory for the purposes outlined in paragraph 3. Failure to provide them results in the non-provision of the requested service, its proper execution, and any legal obligations.\n\nYour data is stored at the Offices and Services of Roma Capitale and external custodians. If necessary, your data may also be stored by other subjects indicated in paragraph 6.\n\n6. Communication and Dissemination of Personal Data (Art. 13.1.e Regulation 679/2016/EU)\n\n If necessary, your personal data may be communicated (meaning made known to one or more specific subjects) to:\n\n - subjects whose right to access the data is recognized by law, secondary and community legislation;\n - collaborators, employees, and consultants of Roma Capitale, within the scope of their duties and/or any contractual obligations;\n - suppliers, including data processors designated pursuant to art. 28 of Regulation EU 2016/679, acting on behalf of Roma Capitale;\n - individuals and/or legal entities, public and/or private, when communication is necessary or functional to the activity of Roma Capitale in the ways and for the purposes outlined above.\n\nYour personal data is not disseminated, meaning made known in any way to an unspecified number of subjects, except for legal obligations.\n\n7. Criteria Used to Determine the Retention Period (Art. 13.2.a Regulation 679/2016/EU)\n\n The Data Controller declares that the personal data of the interested party subject to processing will be retained for the period necessary to respect the retention terms established by the Conservation Plan of Italian Municipalities (ANCI 2005) and, in any case, in compliance with the regulations in force.\n\n8. Rights of the Interested Party (Art. 13.2.b Regulation 679/2016/EU)\n\n It is communicated that, at any time, the interested party may exercise:\n\n - the right to request the Data Controller, under Art. 15 Reg. 679/2016/EU, to access their personal data;\n - the right to request the Data Controller, under Art. 16 Reg. 679/2016/EU, to rectify their personal data, where it does not conflict with the current legislation on data retention;\n - the right to request the Data Controller, under Art. 17 Reg. 679/2016/EU, to delete their personal data, where it does not conflict with the current legislation on data retention;\n - the right to request the Data Controller, under Art. 18 Reg. 679/2016/EU, to limit the processing of their personal data;\n - the right to object to processing, under Art. 21 Reg. 679/2016/EU.\n\n9. Right to Lodge a Complaint (Art. 13.2.d Regulation 679/2016/EU)\n\n It is noted that the interested party has the right to lodge a complaint with a supervisory authority (in particular with the Italian Data Protection Authority www.garanteprivacy.it).\n\n10. Source of Data (Art. 14 Regulation 679"]}, "status": "finished_partial_completion", "end_turn": false, "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"citations": [], "gizmo_id": null, "finish_details": {"type": "max_tokens"}, "is_complete": true, "message_type": null, "model_slug": "gpt-4o", "default_model_slug": "auto", "pad": "AAAAAAAAA", "parent_id": "638b0245-89c6-4e41-a422-a59382309991", "request_id": "8a53388a086a5238-MXP", "timestamp_": "absolute"}, "recipient": "all", "channel": null}, "parent": "638b0245-89c6-4e41-a422-a59382309991", "children": ["7665810d-74e3-4e08-944e-a8bf0a0a39dc"]}, "7665810d-74e3-4e08-944e-

Here's a detailed guide on how to register the marriage online in Italy for immigration purposes:\n\n### Steps to Register the Marriage Online:\n\n1. Prepare Required Documents:\n - Apostilled Marriage Certificate: Obtain an apostille on the original marriage certificate from the country where the marriage took place.\n - Translation of the Marriage Certificate: The certificate must be translated into Italian. If translated in Italy, the translation must be sworn at an Italian Civil Court. If translated abroad, it must be legalized or apostilled.\n - Identity Documents: Valid identity documents (passport or ID card) for both spouses.\n - Proof of Italian Citizenship: For the Italian citizen, this could be a passport or Italian identity card.\n\n2. Application Form:\n - Complete the transcription request form for the foreign marriage certificate. This form is often available on the website of the relevant

Italian consulate or municipal office (Comune).\n\n3. Online Submission:\n - Visit the official website of the Italian consulate responsible for the area where the U.S. citizen resides, or the website of the relevant Italian Comune (municipal office).\n - Look for the section dealing with civil status services (Servizi di Stato Civile).\n - Find the option for the transcription of foreign marriage certificates and follow the instructions for online submission. This typically involves creating an account on the consulate or comune's portal.\n\n4. Upload Documents:\n - Scan and upload all required documents, including the apostilled marriage certificate, the sworn translation, and identity documents.\n - Ensure all uploaded documents are clear and legible.\n\n5. Pay Fees (if applicable):\n - Some consulates or comuni may charge a fee for processing the transcription of foreign documents. Ensure you follow the instructions to pay any applicable fees.\n\n6. Track Your Application:\n - After submission, you should receive a confirmation email with details on how to track your application status. Some consulates or comuni provide a tracking system on their website.\n\n### Additional Considerations:\n\n- Follow Up: If you do not receive confirmation or encounter issues with the online system, contact the consulate or comune directly via email or phone for assistance.\n- Consular Assistance: For assistance, you can contact the Italian consulate in the U.S. where the marriage took place or where the U.S. citizen resides. They can provide guidance specific to their jurisdiction.\n- Comune Registration: If residing in Italy, you may also need to visit your local comune to ensure all records are properly updated and to complete any additional steps required for immigration purposes.\n\n### Useful Links:\n\n- Italian Consulates in the USA: Find the relevant consulate based on your jurisdiction.\n - Italian Consulate General in New York\n - Italian Consulate General in Los Angeles\n - Full list of Italian consulates in the USA\n\n- Comune di Roma: For those residing in Rome.\n - Comune di Roma - Servizi di Stato Civile\n\n### Final Tips:\n\n- Ensure all documents are correctly apostilled, translated, and properly scanned.\n- Keep copies of all submitted documents and receipts of any fees paid.\n- Be patient and follow up regularly to ensure the registration process is completed smoothly.\n\nBy following these steps, you can register your marriage in Italy online for immigration purposes.”]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true

Here's a recap of how foreign marriage documents, like a marriage between an Italian citizen and a U.S. citizen conducted abroad, are registered in Italy:\n\n1. Preparation of Documents: This involves obtaining the original marriage certificate and having it apostilled (if the marriage occurred in a country that is part of the Hague Apostille Convention). The document must also be translated into Italian, and the translation must be legalized or apostilled if done outside Italy or sworn before a court if done within Italy.\n\n2. Online Registration: The process involves submitting these documents for registration through an online portal or by contacting the local Italian consulate or "Comune" (municipality). This registration is crucial for the marriage to be recognized under Italian law and for subsequent legal and civil purposes within Italy.\n\n3. Application Form: You would typically need to complete a form specifically for the transcription of the foreign marriage certificate into the Italian civil status registers.\n\nIn summary, if by "atti asteri" you meant the registration of foreign acts/documents, the steps I outlined do indeed pertain to the transcription of such documents, specifically foreign marriage certificates, into the Italian legal system for official recognition and related civil or immigration purposes."]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true

\u30100\u2020Contact us\u2020vademecumitalia.com\u3011 form and I will send you a quote for the assistance.\n\nMoroever, as I wrote in our previous guide \u301010\u2020Are you sure your marriage has actually been transcribed?\u2020vademecumitalia.com\u3011, please consider that even if you request the transcription of your act with the Italian Consulate, you should know that, unfortunately, the fact that the Consulate has sent the papers (via post or via pec) to your Italian\u00a0Comune,\u00a0does not necessarily mean that the birth or marriage have actually been transcribed, or will actually be transcribed anytime soon, even if the papers were sent many years ago,\n\nSo, filing your request with an Italian attorney gives you the guaratee that you will be assisted from the beginning of the process to the end, when you will receive a formal communication that your act of birth or marriage has actually been transcribed. \n\nAfter the transcription is performed by the Comune, I will then be able to request your \u201cestratto per riassunto dell\u2019atto di nascita\u201d or \u201cestratto per riassunto dell\u2019atto di matrimonio\u201d from your Italian Comune. \n\nIf you want to know more about the estratto service, please read our guide \u301011\u2020FAQ. "https://www.vademecumitalia.com/can-i-register-a-birth-or-marriage-certificate-in-my-italian-comune-without-going-through-the-italian-consulate/", "text": "\nYou just can\u2019t believe that it takes all this time to register a birth or marriage certificate in Italy, and feel frustrated and disappointed at the same time. You then ask yourself if there is anything you can do, because you do not want to wait all this time, especially considering that it probably took you weeks (in some countries months) to obtain the original act of birth or marriage with the Apostille.\n\nWell, what you probably don\u2019t know at that particular moment, is that you should not feel frustrated and disappointed because you do not need to go through the Italian Consulate and wait for ages to transcribe your children\u2019s births or your marriage in Italy. There is a much easier and faster way to do it.\n\nIn fact, if you have your original act of birth or marriage with its Apostille (or legalization), and you already know in which Italian Comune (Rome, Milan, Venezia etc.) you should already be registered with the AIRE, all you have to do is send an email to assistance@vademecumitalia.com and I will tell you how an Italian lawyer can assist you with the transcription of your act of birth or marriage with your Italian Comune, without going through your local Italian Consulate. \n\nAs a matter of fact, you should know that with the complete orignal document (act of birth or marriage), which must bear the Apostille and translation, an Italian attorney can file the request for transcription with your Italian Comune on your behalf. The Comune will then confirm the transcription of your act of birth or marriage. \n\nIt will take you a lot less time than doing it with your local Italian Consulate.\n\nIf you want to receive assistance with the registration request of your act of birth or marriage with your Italian Comune, please send an email to assistance@vademecumitalia.com or fill out the \u30100\u2020Contact us\u2020vademecumitalia.com\u3011 form and I will send you a quote for the assistance.\n\nMoroever, as I wrote in our previous guide \u301010\u2020Are you sure your marriage has actually been transcribed?\u2020vademecumitalia.com\u3011, please consider that even if you request the transcription of your act with the Italian Consulate, you should know that, unfortunately, the fact that the Consulate has sent the papers (via post or via pec) to your Italian\u00a0Comune,\u00a0does not necessarily mean that the birth or marriage have actually been transcribed, or will actually be transcribed anytime soon, even if the papers were sent many years ago,\n\nSo, filing your request with an Italian attorney gives you the guaratee that you will be assisted from the beginning of the process to the end, when you will receive a formal communication that your act of birth or marriage has actually been transcribed. \n\nAfter the transcription is performed by the Comune, I will then be able to request your \u201cestratto per riassunto dell\u2019atto di nascita\u201d or \u201cestratto per riassunto dell\u2019atto di matrimonio\u201d from your Italian Comune. \n\nIf you want to know more about the estratto service, please read our guide \u301011\u2020FAQ. Estratto per riassunto dell\u2019atto di matrimonio. What is it, where, when, and how can you request it? \u2020vademecumitalia.com\u3011If you want to receive assistance with the request of your estratto di nascita or estratto di matrimonio from your Italian Comune, please send an email to assistance@vademecumitalia.com or fill out the \u30100\u2020Contact us\u2020vademecumitalia.com\u3011 form and I will send you a quote for the assistance.\n\nDavid\n\nPrint[Image 2: Share on email]\n\nEmail\n\n\u301012\u2020Facebook\u2020www.facebook.com\u3011\u301013\u2020Twitter\u2020twitter.com\u3011\u301014\u2020Linkedin\u2020www.linkedin.com\u3011\u301015\u2020Whatsapp\u2020web.whatsapp.com\u3011\n\nBy \u301016\u2020David\u3011 on November

assistance@vademecumitalia.com and I will tell you how an Italian lawyer can assist you with the transcription of your act of birth or marriage with your Italian Comune, without going through your local Italian Consulate. \n\nAs a matter of fact, you should know that with the complete orignal document (act of birth or marriage), which must bear the Apostille and translation, an Italian attorney can file the request for transcription with your Italian Comune on your behalf. The Comune will then confirm the transcription of your act of birth or marriage. \n\nIt will take you a lot less time than doing it with your local Italian Consulate.\n\nIf you want to receive assistance with the registration request of your act of birth or marriage with your Italian Comune, please send an email to assistance@vademecumitalia.com or fill out the \u30100\u2020Contact us\u2020vademecumitalia.com\u3011 form and I will send you a quote for the assistance.\n\nMoroever, as I wrote in our previous guide \u301010\u2020Are you sure your marriage has actually been transcribed?\u2020vademecumitalia.com\u3011, please consider that even if you request the transcription of your act with the Italian Consulate, you should know that, unfortunately, the fact that the Consulate has sent the papers (via post or via pec) to your Italian\u00a0Comune,\u00a0does not necessarily mean that the birth or marriage have actually been transcribed, or will actually be transcribed anytime soon, even if the papers were sent many years ago,\n\nSo, filing your request with an Italian attorney gives you the guaratee that you will be assisted from the beginning of the process to the end, when you will receive a formal communication that your act of birth or marriage has actually been transcribed. \n\nAfter the transcription is performed by the Comune, I will then be able to request your \u201cestratto per riassunto dell\u2019atto di nascita\u201d or \u201cestratto per riassunto dell\u2019atto di matrimonio\u201d from your Italian Comune. \n\nIf you want to know more about the estratto service, please read our guide \u301011\u2020FAQ. You then ask yourself if there is anything you can do, because you do not want to wait all this time, especially considering that it probably took you weeks (in some countries months) to obtain the original act of birth or marriage with the Apostille.\n\nWell, what you probably don\u2019t know at that particular moment, is that you should not feel frustrated and disappointed because you do not need to go through the Italian Consulate and wait for ages to transcribe your children\u2019s births or your marriage in Italy. There is a much easier and faster way to do it.\n\nIn fact, if you have your original act of birth or marriage with its Apostille (or legalization), and you already know in which Italian Comune (Rome, Milan, Venezia etc.) you should already be registered with the AIRE, all you have to do is send an email to assistance@vademecumitalia.com and I will tell you how an Italian lawyer can assist you with the transcription of your act of birth or marriage with your Italian Comune, without going through your local Italian Consulate. \n\nAs a matter of fact, you should know that with the complete orignal document (act of birth or marriage), which must bear the Apostille and translation, an Italian attorney can file the request for transcription with your Italian Comune on your behalf. The Comune will then confirm the transcription of your act of birth or marriage. \n\nIt will take you a lot less time than doing it with your local Italian Consulate.\n\nIf you want to receive assistance with the registration request of your act of birth or marriage with your Italian Comune, please send an email to assistance@vademecumitalia.com or fill out the \u30100\u2020Contact us\u2020vademecumitalia.com\u3011 form and I will send you a quote for the assistance.\n\nMoroever, as I wrote in our previous guide \u301010\u2020Are you sure your marriage has actually been transcribed?\u2020vademecumitalia.com\u3011, please consider that even if you request the transcription of your act with the Italian Consulate, you should know that, unfortunately, the fact that the Consulate has sent the papers (via post or via pec) to your Italian\u00a0Comune,\u00a0does not necessarily mean that the birth or marriage have actually been transcribed, or will actually be transcribed anytime soon, even if the papers were sent many years ago,\n\nSo, filing your request with an Italian attorney gives you the guaratee that you will be assisted from the beginning of the process to the end, when you will receive a formal communication that your act of birth or marriage has actually been transcribed. \n\nAfter the transcription is performed by the Comune, I will then be able to request your \u201cestratto per riassunto dell\u2019atto di nascita\u201d or \u201cestratto per riassunto dell\u2019atto di matrimonio\u201d from your Italian Comune. \n\nIf you want to know more about the estratto service, please read our guide \u301011\u2020FAQ. This translation must be done by a certified translator.\n - The translation itself may need to be certified or legalized depending on the requirements of the local office where you will submit the document.\n\n2. Register the Marriage in Italy:\n - Before applying for a residence card, your marriage needs to be recognized in Italy. You should submit the apostilled and translated marriage certificate to the local "Comune" (municipal office) in Italy where you intend to reside. This process is known as transcription of the marriage certificate.\n - Contact the local Comune or consult their website to understand the specific documents required and the procedure to follow. This will typically include filling out a form for the transcription of a foreign marriage certificate and providing a copy of your ID along with the marriage documents.\n\n3. Obtaining a Residence Card:\n - Once your marriage is registered, you can apply for a residence card (carta di soggiorno) as the spouse of an Italian citizen, if applicable.\n - You will need to provide proof of your registered marriage, identification documents, proof of sufficient financial resources, health insurance, and potentially a housing certificate (proof of a place to live).\n - The application for a residence card is usually submitted to the local immigration office or Questura (police headquarters).\n\n4. Visit the Questura or Prefettura:\n - It's important to make an appointment at the local Questura or Prefettura for submitting your application. They can provide you with the specific details and any additional forms required.\n\n5. Follow-Up:\n - After submitting your application, there will be a processing period. You might be issued a receipt that can be used to show your legal status in Italy while your residence card is being processed.\n\n6. Issuance of the Residence Card:\n - Once approved, you will receive your residence card, which is proof of your legal status and right to live in Italy.\n\nEach local office might have slightly different requirements or processes, so it's essential to check directly with the local authorities where you reside or intend to reside in Italy. for Immigration, using the online procedure available on the website of the Ministry of the Interior. \n\nFrom 17 August 2017, the application procedure for family reunification is entirely digital. The Ministry of the Interior with circular 2805 of 31 July 2017 has provided instructions on the new procedure provided for by the law of 13 April 2017. \n\nIn fact, in addition to the application for authorization for reunification, which already had to be submitted electronically through the site https://nullaostalavoro.dlci.interno.it/Ministero/Index2, the documentation on the requirements on income and housing must be provided (as required by article 29, paragraph 3 of the Consolidated Immigration Act): it must be scanned by the party concerned and sent as an annex to the request for reunification. In practice, on the electronic forwarding system for Authorization application forms for family reunification (SM, T and GN), new pages will be available in order to upload the documents necessary for submitting such applications. \n\nThis innovation will allow the Single Desk to check the requirements for housing and income and to issue the authorization within 90 days - new time limit imposed by the law - from submission of the application. \n\nList of documents to include with the application \n\nRequirements \n\nA foreigner wishing to apply for family reunification must hold a valid residence card or residence permit valid for at least one year, or for which renewal has been requested within the prescribed terms, issued for subordinate work or self-employment reasons, or for asylum, study, religious or family reasons. \n\nThe issuance of the visa and the subsequent achievement of the reunification are subject to the check of the existence of some requirements. \n\nThe foreigner legally residing in Italy must in fact prove the availability of: \n\nAdequate housing, i.e. with the hygienic and sanitary requirements, ascertained by the certificate of habitability. The party concerned must therefore request the appropriate certificate from the Technical Office of the Municipality of residence. If the person requesting reunification is a guest, he/she must also accompany the application for reunification with the declaration drawn up by the owner of the apartment, according to the S2 form, which includes consent to host aslo the family member or members involved in reunification. In case of reunification in favour of only one child under 14, the municipal certificate can be replaced by a declaration of hospitality by the owner of the apartment on S1 form. The applicant must also attach to the application a copy of the lease or loan agreement or ownership of the building, for a period of not less than six months, starting from the date of submission of the application. \n\nThe requirements relating to housing suitability, as indicated in the Circular of the Ministry of the Interior of 18 November 2009 no. 7170, in accordance with the European Union directive on family reunification (article 7, paragraph 1, letter a), are those contained in the Decree of 5 July 1975 of the Ministry of Health, which establishes the main hygiene and sanitary requirements of the housing areas and which also specifies the minimum area requirements of the housing, in relation to the expected number of occupants. In particular, the housing must comply with the following requirements: \n\nArea per inhabitant: \n\n * 1 inhabitant: 14 square meters\n * 2 inhabitants: 28 square meters\n * 3 inhabitants: 42 square meters\n * 4 inhabitants 56 square meters\n * For each subsequent inhabitant + 10 square meters\n\nComposition of the premises: \n\n * Bedroom for 1 person: 9 square meters\n * Bedroom for 2 people: 14 square meters + a living room of 14 square meters\n\nFor single-room housing: \n\n * 1 person: 28 square meters (including bathroom)\n * 2 people: 38 square meters (including bathroom)\n\nMinimum height: 2.70 meters \n\nAeration: Living room and kitchen with opening window. Bathroom, when not with a window, equipped with a mechanical suction system \n\nminimum annual INCOME deriving from legal sources not lower than the annual amount of the social allowance increased by half of the amount of the social allowance for each family member involved in reunification. This income parameter can be annually updated and the income necessary increases depending on the number of family members involved in reunification. \n\nThe documentation to be submitted to certify the availability of income varies according to the type of employment of the applicant: \n\nList of documents to include with the application \n\nFor the purposes of determining income, the total annual income of family members living with the applicant is considered. \n\nIt is not necessary to demonstrate possession of the appropriate housing requirements and income for refugees. \n\nFamily members that can be involved in reunification \n\nThe foreigner in Italy can request reunification of the following family members still abroad: \n\n * Spouse who is over the age of 18 and with whom the person residing in Italy is not legally separated.\n * Children who at the time of the application for reunification are under 18, including those of the spouse or born out of wedlock, provided they are not married and that the other parent (if any) has expressed consent. Minor children adopted or entrusted or protected are equal to children.\n * Adult children who are dependent on the foreigner residing in Italy, when, for objective reasons, they cannot provide for their indispensable life needs for serious health reasons that entail total disability.\n * Parents dependent on the foreigner residing in Italy or parents over 65 years of age, when there are no other children able to provide for their subsistence in the country of origin or provenance or if the other children cannot provide for serious health reasons that can be documented.\n\nIn the case of parents over the age of 65, health insurance is also required. At the time the request for reunification is submitted, it is sufficient to submit a declaration of commitment to stipulate an insurance policy. This must then be stipulated within 8 days of entry into the territory of the State and before submission to the Single Desk, under the following conditions: the insurance must not have expiration date and must cover risks of illness, accidents and maternity. \n\nEntry is also permitted for reunification with the natural parent of the minor legally residing in Italy with the other parent. The application for authorization can be presented on behalf of the minor by the regularly residing parent. For income and housing requirements, the condition of the regularly residing parent is taken into account. \n\n\u301012\u2020Ministry of the Interior, Circular of 17 February 2009, no. 737\u2020www1.interno.gov.it\u3011 \n\nFollowing the entry into force of Law no. 118/2016, which regulates civil unions between persons of the same gender, the rules on family reunification also extend to foreign citizens of the same gender who are civilly united, among themselves or with Italian citizens. \n\n\u301013\u2020Circular of Ministry of the Interior of 5 August 2016, no. 3511\u2020www.libertaciviliimmigrazione.dlci.interno.gov.it\u3011 \n\nA foreigner regularly residing in Italy cannot request family reunification if already married to another spouse residing in Italy. \n\nApplication procedure \n\nIf the application is accepted, the Single Desk shall issue the authorization for reunification, submitting online directly to the Italian Consular Offices in the country of origin or residence of the family still abroad and to be involved in reunification, opening the second phase of the procedure, or verification of the subjective requirements for issuance of an entry visa. \n\nFamily members for whom the authorization has been requested must therefore submit to the Consular Offices, together with the request for issuance of the entry visa, the certification attesting the relationship of kinship

The Ministry of the Interior with circular 2805 of 31 July 2017 has provided instructions on the new procedure provided for by the law of 13 April 2017. \n\nIn fact, in addition to the application for authorization for reunification, which already had to be submitted electronically through the site https://nullaostalavoro.dlci.interno.it/Ministero/Index2, the documentation on the requirements on income and housing must be provided (as required by article 29, paragraph 3 of the Consolidated Immigration Act): it must be scanned by the party concerned and sent as an annex to the request for reunification. In practice, on the electronic forwarding system for Authorization application forms for family reunification (SM, T and GN), new pages will be available in order to upload the documents necessary for submitting such applications. \n\nThis innovation will allow the Single Desk to check the requirements for housing and income and to issue the authorization within 90 days - new time limit imposed by the law - from submission of the application. \n\nList of documents to include with the application \n\nRequirements \n\nA foreigner wishing to apply for family reunification must hold a valid residence card or residence permit valid for at least one year, or for which renewal has been requested within the prescribed terms, issued for subordinate work or self-employment reasons, or for asylum, study, religious or family reasons. \n\nThe issuance of the visa and the subsequent achievement of the reunification are subject to the check of the existence of some requirements. \n\nThe foreigner legally residing in Italy must in fact prove the availability of: \n\nAdequate housing, i.e. with the hygienic and sanitary requirements, ascertained by the certificate of habitability. The party concerned must therefore request the appropriate certificate from the Technical Office of the Municipality of residence. If the person requesting reunification is a guest, he/she must also accompany the application for reunification with the declaration drawn up by the owner of the apartment, according to the S2 form, which includes consent to host aslo the family member or members involved in reunification. In case of reunification in favour of only one child under 14, the municipal certificate can be replaced by a declaration of hospitality by the owner of the apartment on S1 form. The applicant must also attach to the application a copy of the lease or loan agreement or ownership of the building, for a period of not less than six months, starting from the date of submission of the application. \n\nThe requirements relating to housing suitability, as indicated in the Circular of the Ministry of the Interior of 18 November 2009 no. 7170, in accordance with the European Union directive on family reunification (article 7, paragraph 1, letter a), are those contained in the Decree of 5 July 1975 of the Ministry of Health, which establishes the main hygiene and sanitary requirements of the housing areas and which also specifies the minimum area requirements of the housing, in relation to the expected number of occupants. In particular, the housing must comply with the following requirements: \n\nArea per inhabitant: \n\n * 1 inhabitant: 14 square meters\n * 2 inhabitants: 28 square meters\n * 3 inhabitants: 42 square meters\n * 4 inhabitants 56 square meters\n * For each subsequent inhabitant + 10 square meters\n\nComposition of the premises: \n\n * Bedroom for 1 person: 9 square meters\n * Bedroom for 2 people: 14 square meters + a living room of 14 square meters\n\nFor single-room housing: \n\n * 1 person: 28 square meters (including bathroom)\n * 2 people: 38 square meters (including bathroom)\n\nMinimum height: 2.70 meters \n\nAeration: Living room and kitchen with opening window. This is called a\u00a0Nulla Osta\u00a0and it is basically a clearance from the competent Italian authorities, allowing your family members to join you in Italy. You must apply for a\u00a0Nulla Osta\u00a0at an Italian Immigration Desk (Sportello Unico per l\u2019immigrazione) or online by linking to the Ministry of the Interior address\u00a0\u301020\u2020https://nullaostalavoro.interno.it\u2020nullaostalavoro.interno.it\u3011. If the Immigration Desk issues the authorization, they will electronically forward it to the appropriate Italian embassy or consulate where your family members will submit the visa application.\n\nThe application for nulla osta must be submitted with all the documents attesting the applicant\u2019s eligibility. The competent authority must issue the nulla osta or notify its rejection within 60 days from the application submission.\n\n> If, on the other hand, the request is rejected, against the refusal of the authorization, it is possible to appeal to the ordinary Court of the place of residence of the applicant regularly residing in Italy.\n\nThe\u00a0Nulla Osta\u00a0is valid for six months. Your family members must apply for an Italian Family Visa at their home country within this period.\n\nPlease note: In case you are bringing your parent/s to Italy:\n\nOriginal copies of your birth certificate, proof your parent/s is dependent on you (such as money transfers), a written statement from your parent/s, declaring they are dependent on you. In the case in which the possession of the required conditions cannot be proved in a certain way through certificates issued by competent foreign authorities, or in any case of serious doubts on the authenticity of the above-mentioned documentation, the diplomatic or consular representations provide for the issue of certifications, on the basis of the DNA test and of necessary checks.\n\nThe application process for an Italian Family Visa goes as follows:\n\n 1. Book a visa appointment at an Italian embassy or consulate in their country.\n 2. Download and complete Italy Long-Stay Visa Application Form.\n 3. Gather all the necessary documents. For example proof of family relationship, as applicable: Birth certificates for children and marriage certificate for your spouse duly legalized.\n 4. When the date of the appointment comes, submit the application in person.\n 5. Pay the Italian visa fee.\n 6. Enter a visa interview.\n 7. Wait for processing.\n\nOnce the foreign national has received the visa for family reunification and entered Italy, he/she must go to the Sportello Unico per l\u2019Immigrazione within 8 days and present the following documents to the competent post office.\n\n * An identity card;\n * The completed postal-kit with the payment of tax issuance;\n * A copy of the security clearance (Nulla Osta) to enter in Italy;\n * A copy of their Visa;\n * The whole passport.\n\nThe competent desk will issue a receipt with the data of the first appointment to the competent police Headquarters, for their personal appearance and the fingerprints. After this appointment, the police headquarters will contact them for the withdrawer of their electronic permit card.\n\nThe new comer should also go to the following offices to:\n\n * Municipality\u00a0(\u201cComune\u201d) of residence\u00a0to\u00a0apply to be registered in the Civil State Registrar \n * Azienda ASL\u00a0(local sanitary district) to apply to be registered in the National Health Service (to obtain the Health Card)\n\n#### Family Cohesion\n\nThe procedure for issuance of the relative authorization is similar to the procedure for issuance of the authorization for family reunification. The application must be sent electronically to the Single Desk for Immigration, by means of the online procedure available on the website of the Ministry of the Interior. Before you travel to Italy, you must prepare all the required documents\n\n1. Your marriage certificate OFFICIALLY translated into Italian AND legalized\n\n2. The birth certificates of your children OFFICIALLY translated into Italian AND legalized\n\nOfficial translations are made in the Italian Embassies or by authorized translators. The legalization can be done by the Italian Embassies or, if your home country has signed The Hague Agreement, with the \u201cApostille\u201d stamp applied by the competent Ministry of your country both on the original and on the translation into Italian.\n\n> \u00a0WITHOUT THIS DOCUMENTATION NO FAMILY COHESION WILL BE POSSIBLE AND YOUR FAMILY WILL HAVE TO GO BACK AT THE EXPIRY DATE OF THE TOURIST VISA (up to max 90 DAYS).\n\nThe foreign national residing in Italy with a residence permit for family reasons has access to assistance services, study courses or vocational training, job opportunities.\n\nThe duration of the permit is the same as the duration of the permit for the foreign national who has applied for family reunification and it is possible to renew it along with the latter.\n\nWell, now you have more than a bit of information in case you are planning to bring your family to Italy either now or in the future. The process can be cumbersome for some; you may decide to employ the services of a migration lawyer, if you will.\n\nI would like to hear from you: What are your thoughts on this subject. Wait for processing.\n\nOnce the foreign national has received the visa for family reunification and entered Italy, he/she must go to the Sportello Unico per l\u2019Immigrazione within 8 days and present the following documents to the competent post office.\n\n * An identity card;\n * The completed postal-kit with the payment of tax issuance;\n * A copy of the security clearance (Nulla Osta) to enter in Italy;\n * A copy of their Visa;\n * The whole passport.\n\nThe competent desk will issue a receipt with the data of the first appointment to the competent police Headquarters, for their personal appearance and the fingerprints. After this appointment, the police headquarters will contact them for the withdrawer of their electronic permit card.\n\nThe new comer should also go to the following offices to:\n\n * Municipality\u00a0(\u201cComune\u201d) of residence\u00a0to\u00a0apply to be registered in the Civil State Registrar \n * Azienda ASL\u00a0(local sanitary district) to apply to be registered in the National Health Service (to obtain the Health Card)\n\n#### Family Cohesion\n\nThe procedure for issuance of the relative authorization is similar to the procedure for issuance of the authorization for family reunification. The application must be sent electronically to the Single Desk for Immigration, by means of the online procedure available on the website of the Ministry of the Interior. Before you travel to Italy, you must prepare all the required documents\n\n1. Your marriage certificate OFFICIALLY translated into Italian AND legalized\n\n2. The birth certificates of your children OFFICIALLY translated into Italian AND legalized\n\nOfficial translations are made in the Italian Embassies or by authorized translators. The legalization can be done by the Italian Embassies or, if your home country has signed The Hague Agreement, with the \u201cApostille\u201d stamp applied by the competent Ministry of your country both on the original and on the translation into Italian.\n\n> \u00a0WITHOUT THIS DOCUMENTATION NO FAMILY COHESION WILL BE POSSIBLE AND YOUR FAMILY WILL HAVE TO GO BACK AT THE EXPIRY DATE OF THE TOURIST VISA (up to max 90 DAYS).\n\nThe foreign national residing in Italy with a residence permit for family reasons has access to assistance services, study courses or vocational training, job opportunities.\n\nThe duration of the permit is the same as the duration of the permit for the foreign national who has applied for family reunification and it is possible to renew it along with the latter.\n\nWell, now you have more than a bit of information in case you are planning to bring your family to Italy either now or in the future. The process can be cumbersome for some; you may decide to employ the services of a migration lawyer, if you will.\n\nI would like to hear from you: What are your thoughts on this subject. reunification: requirements and procedure \n\nThe entry of family members of foreigners legally residing in Italy occurs upon the issuance of a visa for family reunification. \n\nThe entry visa must be requested by the foreigner legally residing in Italy submitting the request for authorization for reunification at the Single Desk for Immigration, using the online procedure available on the website of the Ministry of the Interior. \n\nFrom 17 August 2017, the application procedure for family reunification is entirely digital. The Ministry of the Interior with circular 2805 of 31 July 2017 has provided instructions on the new procedure provided for by the law of 13 April 2017. \n\nIn fact, in addition to the application for authorization for reunification, which already had to be submitted electronically through the site https://nullaostalavoro.dlci.interno.it/Ministero/Index2, the documentation on the requirements on income and housing must be provided (as required by article 29, paragraph 3 of the Consolidated Immigration Act): it must be scanned by the party concerned and sent as an annex to the request for reunification. In practice, on the electronic forwarding system for Authorization application forms for family reunification (SM, T and GN), new pages will be available in order to upload the documents necessary for submitting such applications. \n\nThis innovation will allow the Single Desk to check the requirements for housing and income and to issue the authorization within 90 days - new time limit imposed by the law - from submission of the application. \n\nList of documents to include with the application \n\nRequirements \n\nA foreigner wishing to apply for family reunification must hold a valid residence card or residence permit valid for at least one year, or for which renewal has been requested within the prescribed terms, issued for subordinate work or self-employment reasons, or for asylum, study, religious or family reasons. \n\nThe issuance of the visa and the subsequent achievement of the reunification are subject to the check of the existence of some requirements. \n\nThe foreigner legally residing in Italy must in fact prove the availability of: \n\nAdequate housing, i.e. with the hygienic and sanitary requirements, ascertained by the certificate of habitability. The party concerned must therefore request the appropriate certificate from the Technical Office of the Municipality of residence. If the person requesting reunification is a guest, he/she must also accompany the application for reunification with the declaration drawn up by the owner of the apartment, according to the S2 form, which includes consent to host aslo the family member or members involved in reunification. In case of reunification in favour of only one child under 14, the municipal certificate can be replaced by a declaration of hospitality by the owner of the apartment on S1 form. The applicant must also attach to the application a copy of the lease or loan agreement or ownership of the building, for a period of not less than six months, starting from the date of submission of the application. \n\nThe requirements relating to housing suitability, as indicated in the Circular of the Ministry of the Interior of 18 November 2009 no. 7170, in accordance with the European Union directive on family reunification (article 7, paragraph 1, letter a), are those contained in the Decree of 5 July 1975 of the Ministry of Health, which establishes the main hygiene and sanitary requirements of the housing areas and which also specifies the minimum area requirements of the housing, in relation to the expected number of occupants. In particular, the housing must comply with the following requirements: \n\nArea per inhabitant: \n\n * 1 inhabitant: 14 square meters\n * 2 inhabitants: 28 square meters\n * 3 inhabitants: 42 square meters\n * 4 inhabitants 56 square meters\n * For each subsequent inhabitant + 10 square meters\n\nComposition of the premises: \n\n * Bedroom for 1 person: 9 square meters\n * Bedroom for 2 people: 14 square meters + a living room of 14 square meters\n\nFor single-room housing: \n\n * 1 person: 28 square meters (including bathroom)\n * 2 people: 38 square meters (including bathroom)\n\nMinimum height: 2.70 meters \n\nAeration: Living room and kitchen with opening window. Bathroom, when not with a window, equipped with a mechanical suction system \n\nminimum annual INCOME deriving from legal sources not lower than the annual amount of the social allowance increased by half of the amount of the social allowance for each family member involved in reunification. This income parameter can be annually updated and the income necessary increases depending on the number of family members involved in reunification. \n\nThe documentation to be submitted to certify the availability of income varies according to the type of employment of the applicant: \n\nList of documents to include with the application \n\nFor the purposes of determining income, the total annual income of family members living with the applicant is considered. \n\nIt is not necessary to demonstrate possession of the appropriate housing requirements and income for refugees. \n\nFamily members that can be involved in reunification \n\nThe foreigner in Italy can request reunification of the following family members still abroad: \n\n * Spouse who is over the age of 18 and with whom the person residing in Italy is not legally separated.\n * Children who at the time of the application for reunification are under 18, including those of the spouse or born out of wedlock, provided they are not married and that the other parent (if any) has expressed consent. Minor children adopted or entrusted or protected are equal to children.\n * Adult children who are dependent on the foreigner residing in Italy, when, for objective reasons, they cannot provide for their indispensable life needs for serious health reasons that entail total disability.\n * Parents dependent on the foreigner residing in Italy or parents over 65 years of age, when there are no other children able to provide for their subsistence in the country of origin or provenance or if the other children cannot provide for serious health reasons that can be documented.\n\nIn the case of parents over the age of 65, health insurance is also required. At the time the request for reunification is submitted, it is sufficient to submit a declaration of commitment to stipulate an insurance policy. This must then be stipulated within 8 days of entry into the territory of the State and before submission to the Single Desk, under the following conditions: the insurance must not have expiration date and must cover risks of illness, accidents and maternity. \n\nEntry is also permitted for reunification with the natural parent of the minor legally residing in Italy with the other parent. The application for authorization can be presented on behalf of the minor by the regularly residing parent. For income and housing requirements, the condition of the regularly residing parent is taken into account. \n\n\u301012\u2020Ministry of the Interior, Circular of 17 February 2009, no. 737\u2020www1.interno.gov.it\u3011 \n\nFollowing the entry into force of Law no. 118/2016, which regulates civil unions between persons of the same gender, the rules on family reunification also extend to foreign citizens of the same gender who are civilly united, among themselves or with Italian citizens. \n\n\u301013\u2020Circular of Ministry of the Interior of 5 August 2016, no.

There is no legalization when bilateral or international agreements have been concluded on the abolition of the legalization of foreign public deeds on the basis of the Convention concerning the abolition of the legalization of foreign public deeds (The Hague, 1961) \n\nIn the event that the certification requested is not available due to lack of the competent foreign authority or if the latter does not provide the necessary reliability, the diplomatic representation in the country of origin (or otherwise competent) of the family members shall issue the aforementioned documentation on the basis of the verifications deemed necessary, also by conducting the DNA examination, carried out at the expense of those concerned. \n\nIn the case of adult dependent children, the state of health can be documented through certification issued - at the expense of the applicant - by the doctor appointed by the Italian diplomatic-consular representation competent for the country of origin of the family members for whom reunification was requested. \n\nIf, on the other hand, the request is rejected, against the refusal of the authorization, it is possible to appeal to the ordinary Court of the place of residence of the applicant regularly residing in Italy. \n\nThe visa for reunification with the family member - for whom the authorization has been provided \u2013 is issued or refused within 30 days of the request. This is called a\u00a0Nulla Osta\u00a0and it is basically a clearance from the competent Italian authorities, allowing your family members to join you in Italy. You must apply for a\u00a0Nulla Osta\u00a0at an Italian Immigration Desk (Sportello Unico per l\u2019immigrazione) or online by linking to the Ministry of the Interior address\u00a0\u301020\u2020https://nullaostalavoro.interno.it\u2020nullaostalavoro.interno.it\u3011. If the Immigration Desk issues the authorization, they will electronically forward it to the appropriate Italian embassy or consulate where your family members will submit the visa application.\n\nThe application for nulla osta must be submitted with all the documents attesting the applicant\u2019s eligibility. The competent authority must issue the nulla osta or notify its rejection within 60 days from the application submission.\n\n> If, on the other hand, the request is rejected, against the refusal of the authorization, it is possible to appeal to the ordinary Court of the place of residence of the applicant regularly residing in Italy.\n\nThe\u00a0Nulla Osta\u00a0is valid for six months. Your family members must apply for an Italian Family Visa at their home country within this period.\n\nPlease note: In case you are bringing your parent/s to Italy:\n\nOriginal copies of your birth certificate, proof your parent/s is dependent on you (such as money transfers), a written statement from your parent/s, declaring they are dependent on you. In the case in which the possession of the required conditions cannot be proved in a certain way through certificates issued by competent foreign authorities, or in any case of serious doubts on the authenticity of the above-mentioned documentation, the diplomatic or consular representations provide for the issue of certifications, on the basis of the DNA test and of necessary checks.\n\nThe application process for an Italian Family Visa goes as follows:\n\n 1. Book a visa appointment at an Italian embassy or consulate in their country.\n 2. Download and complete Italy Long-Stay Visa Application Form.\n 3. Gather all the necessary documents. For example proof of family relationship, as applicable: Birth certificates for children and marriage certificate for your spouse duly legalized.\n 4. When the date of the appointment comes, submit the application in person.\n 5. Pay the Italian visa fee.\n 6. Enter a visa interview.\n 7. Wait for processing.\n\nOnce the foreign national has received the visa for family reunification and entered Italy, he/she must go to the Sportello Unico per l\u2019Immigrazione within 8 days and present the following documents to the competent post office.\n\n * An identity card;\n * The completed postal-kit with the payment of tax issuance;\n * A copy of the security clearance (Nulla Osta) to enter in Italy;\n * A copy of their Visa;\n * The whole passport.\n\nThe competent desk will issue a receipt with the data of the first appointment to the competent police Headquarters, for their personal appearance and the fingerprints. After this appointment, the police headquarters will contact them for the withdrawer of their electronic permit card.\n\nThe new comer should also go to the following offices to:\n\n * Municipality\u00a0(\u201cComune\u201d) of residence\u00a0to\u00a0apply to be registered in the Civil State Registrar \n * Azienda ASL\u00a0(local sanitary district) to apply to be registered in the National Health Service (to obtain the Health Card)\n\n#### Family Cohesion\n\nThe procedure for issuance of the relative authorization is similar to the procedure for issuance of the authorization for family reunification. The application must be sent electronically to the Single Desk for Immigration, by means of the online procedure available on the website of the Ministry of the Interior. Before you travel to Italy, you must prepare all the required documents\n\n1. Your marriage certificate OFFICIALLY translated into Italian AND legalized\n\n2. The birth certificates of your children OFFICIALLY translated into Italian AND legalized\n\nOfficial translations are made in the Italian Embassies or by authorized translators. The legalization can be done by the Italian Embassies or, if your home country has signed The Hague Agreement, with the \u201cApostille\u201d stamp applied by the competent Ministry of your country both on the original and on the translation into Italian.\n\n> \u00a0WITHOUT THIS DOCUMENTATION NO FAMILY COHESION WILL BE POSSIBLE AND YOUR FAMILY WILL HAVE TO GO BACK AT THE EXPIRY DATE OF THE TOURIST VISA (up to max 90 DAYS).\n\nThe foreign national residing in Italy with a residence permit for family reasons has access to assistance services, study courses or vocational training, job opportunities.\n\nThe duration of the permit is the same as the duration of the permit for the foreign national who has applied for family reunification and it is possible to renew it along with the latter.\n\nWell, now you have more than a bit of information in case you are planning to bring your family to Italy either now or in the future. Main eligibility requirements are:\n\n * availability of adequate housing and proof that the financial/maintenance requirement is met\n * provide documented proof of relationship to the person with a regular immigration status in Italy\n\nFamily members who qualify for a family permit (permesso di soggiorno per motivi familiari) are:\n\n * spouse, regularly married and of full legal age (at least 18);\n * children under 18 (also spouse\u2019s children provided the other parent consent is granted);\n * children over 18, only if financially dependent due to serious disability\n * financially dependent parents, provided they do not have any other children in their country of origin or\n * parents over 65 if they do not have any other children who can financially support them in their home country because of serious health reasons\n\n#### Family members of an EU national residing in Italy\n\nUnder the EU principle of freedom of movement and establishment, EU Citizens have the right to enter and stay freely in Italy subject to different procedures depending upon the intended length of stay (less or more than three months). Similar provisions apply to family members accompanying or joining the EU citizen. Family members of an EU national residing in Italy are entitled to obtain an Italian long-term Residence Permit (Carta di Soggiorno per familiare di cittadino comunitario).\n\nThe following family members are eligible to apply:\n\n * spouse;\n * a partner who has entered into a registered union with an EU/EEA citizen, legally recognized;\n * children under 21 years of age or financially dependent children, including those of the partner or spouse;\n * parents if financially dependent, including those of the partner or spouse.\n\n#### Rights of residence derived from a durable relationship with an EU citizen\n\nAn application is possible also for any other family members (under certain circumstances) and for the partner with whom the EU citizen has a durable relationship, duly attested.\n\nRead more\u00a0\u2192\u00a0\u301047\u2020Durable Relationship and Family Members \u201cby Analogy\u201d in the European Union\u3011\n\nWe can assist clients with every step of the family permit application process, from document\u00a0preparation until the collection of the residence permit.\u00a0\u301045\u2020Contact us\u3011\u00a0for a free quote, we would be delighted to help you reach your targets and goals.\n\n[Image 20]\n\n\u301048\u2020Giuditta Petreni\u3011\n\nGiuditta Petreni has over 10 years of experience in assisting companies and business investors with relocation of managers and staff to Italy. reunification is entirely digital. The Ministry of the Interior with circular 2805 of 31 July 2017 has provided instructions on the new procedure provided for by the law of 13 April 2017. \n\nIn fact, in addition to the application for authorization for reunification, which already had to be submitted electronically through the site https://nullaostalavoro.dlci.interno.it/Ministero/Index2, the documentation on the requirements on income and housing must be provided (as required by article 29, paragraph 3 of the Consolidated Immigration Act): it must be scanned by the party concerned and sent as an annex to the request for reunification. In practice, on the electronic forwarding system for Authorization application forms for family reunification (SM, T and GN), new pages will be available in order to upload the documents necessary for submitting such applications. \n\nThis innovation will allow the Single Desk to check the requirements for housing and income and to issue the authorization within 90 days - new time limit imposed by the law - from submission of the application. \n\nList of documents to include with the application \n\nRequirements \n\nA foreigner wishing to apply for family reunification must hold a valid residence card or residence permit valid for at least one year, or for which renewal has been requested within the prescribed terms, issued for subordinate work or self-employment reasons, or for asylum, study, religious or family reasons. \n\nThe issuance of the visa and the subsequent achievement of the reunification are subject to the check of the existence of some requirements. \n\nThe foreigner legally residing in Italy must in fact prove the availability of: \n\nAdequate housing, i.e. with the hygienic and sanitary requirements, ascertained by the certificate of habitability. The party concerned must therefore request the appropriate certificate from the Technical Office of the Municipality of residence. If the person requesting reunification is a guest, he/she must also accompany the application for reunification with the declaration drawn up by the owner of the apartment, according to the S2 form, which includes consent to host aslo the family member or members involved in reunification. In case of reunification in favour of only one child under 14, the municipal certificate can be replaced by a declaration of hospitality by the owner of the apartment on S1 form. The applicant must also attach to the application a copy of the lease or loan agreement or ownership of the building, for a period of not less than six months, starting from the date of submission of the application. \n\nThe requirements relating to housing suitability, as indicated in the Circular of the Ministry of the Interior of 18 November 2009 no. 7170, in accordance with the European Union directive on family reunification (article 7, paragraph 1, letter a), are those contained in the Decree of 5 July 1975 of the Ministry of Health, which establishes the main hygiene and sanitary requirements of the housing areas and which also specifies the minimum area requirements of the housing, in relation to the expected number of occupants. In particular, the housing must comply with the following requirements: \n\nArea per inhabitant: \n\n * 1 inhabitant: 14 square meters\n * 2 inhabitants: 28 square meters\n * 3 inhabitants: 42 square meters\n * 4 inhabitants 56 square meters\n * For each subsequent inhabitant + 10 square meters\n\nComposition of the premises: \n\n * Bedroom for 1 person: 9 square meters\n * Bedroom for 2 people: 14 square meters + a living room of 14 square meters\n\nFor single-room housing: \n\n * 1 person: 28 square meters (including bathroom)\n * 2 people: 38 square meters (including bathroom)\n\nMinimum height: 2.70 meters \n\nAeration: Living room and kitchen with opening window. Bathroom, when not with a window, equipped with a mechanical suction system \n\nminimum annual INCOME deriving from legal sources not lower than the annual amount of the social allowance increased by half of the amount of the social allowance for each family member involved in reunification. This income parameter can be annually updated and the income necessary increases depending on the number of family members involved in reunification. \n\nThe documentation to be submitted to certify the availability of income varies according to the type of employment of the applicant: \n\nList of documents to include with the application \n\nFor the purposes of determining income, the total annual income of family members living with the applicant is considered. \n\nIt is not necessary to demonstrate possession of the appropriate housing requirements and income for refugees. \n\nFamily members that can be involved in reunification \n\nThe foreigner in Italy can request reunification of the following family members still abroad: \n\n * Spouse who is over the age of 18 and with whom the person residing in Italy is not legally separated.\n * Children who at the time of the application for reunification are under 18, including those of the spouse or born out of wedlock, provided they are not married and that the other parent (if any) has expressed consent. Minor children adopted or entrusted or protected are equal to children.\n * Adult children who are dependent on the foreigner residing in Italy, when, for objective reasons, they cannot provide for their indispensable life needs for serious health reasons that entail total disability.\n * Parents dependent on the foreigner residing in Italy or parents over 65 years of age, when there are no other children able to provide for their subsistence in the country of origin or provenance or if the other children cannot provide for serious health reasons that can be documented.\n\nIn the case of parents over the age of 65, health insurance is also required. At the time the request for reunification is submitted, it is sufficient to submit a declaration of commitment to stipulate an insurance policy. This must then be stipulated within 8 days of entry into the territory of the State and before submission to the Single Desk, under the following conditions: the insurance must not have expiration date and must cover risks of illness, accidents and maternity. \n\nEntry is also permitted for reunification with the natural parent of the minor legally residing in Italy with the other parent. The application for authorization can be presented on behalf of the minor by the regularly residing parent. For income and housing requirements, the condition of the regularly residing parent is taken into account. \n\n\u301012\u2020Ministry of the Interior, Circular of 17 February 2009, no. 737\u2020www1.interno.gov.it\u3011 \n\nFollowing the entry into force of Law no. 118/2016, which regulates civil unions between persons of the same gender, the rules on family reunification also extend to foreign citizens of the same gender who are civilly united, among themselves or with Italian citizens. \n\n\u301013\u2020Circular of Ministry of the Interior of 5 August 2016, no. 3511\u2020www.libertaciviliimmigrazione.dlci.interno.gov.it\u3011 \n\nA foreigner regularly residing in Italy cannot request family reunification if already married to another spouse residing in Italy. \n\nApplication procedure \n\nIf the application is accepted, the Single Desk shall issue the authorization for reunification, submitting online directly to the Italian Consular Offices in the country of origin or residence of the family still abroad and to be involved in reunification, opening the second phase of the procedure, or verification of the subjective requirements for issuance of an entry visa. \n\nFamily members for whom the authorization has been requested must therefore submit to the Consular Offices, together with the request for issuance of the entry visa, the certification attesting the relationship of kinship (marriage, minor age and any necessary civil status document) duly translated and legalized by the consular authority. There is no legalization when bilateral or international agreements have been concluded on the abolition of the legalization of foreign public deeds on the basis of the Convention concerning the abolition of the legalization of foreign public deeds (The Hague, 1961) \n\nIn the event that the certification requested is not available due to lack of the competent foreign authority or if the latter does not provide the necessary reliability, the diplomatic representation in the country of origin (or otherwise competent) of the family members shall issue the aforementioned documentation on the basis of the verifications deemed necessary, also by conducting the DNA examination, carried out at the expense of those concerned. \n\nIn the case of adult dependent children, the state of health can be documented through certification issued - at the expense of the applicant - by the doctor appointed by the Italian diplomatic-consular representation competent for the country of origin of the family members for whom reunification was requested. \n\nIf, on the other hand, the request is rejected, against the refusal of the authorization, it is possible to appeal to the ordinary Court of the place of residence of the applicant regularly residing in Italy. \n\nThe visa for reunification with the family member - for whom the authorization has been provided \u2013 is issued or refused within 30 days of the request. The outcome depends on the verification of authenticity by the Italian consular authority, of the documentation proving the conditions of kinship, marriage, minor age or health status of the family member. \n\nIf the applicant is holder of "}, {"matched_text": "\u301036\u2020source\u3011", "start_idx": 1346, "end_idx": 1357, "alt": null, "type": "webpage_extended", "title": "A-Z GUIDE FOR FAMILY REUNIFICATION IN ITALY - Migrants Digest", "url": "https://migrantdigest.com/2020/02/09/a-z-guide-for-family-reunification-in-italy/", "pub_date": null, "snippet": "\nThe table below explains it a little better.\n\nNumber of family members in the apartment Minimum area required Minimum number of bedrooms \n2 45m^{2} 1 \n3 55m^{2} 2 \n4 60m^{2} 2 \n5 65m^{2} 2 \n6 75m^{2} 3 \n7 90m^{2} 3 \n8 95m^{2} 3 \n9 105m^{2} 4 \n10 115m^{2} 5 \n\nNOTE: The dimensions\u00a0are meant as net floor area.\n\nAfter which you would need to get a document called Idoneit\u00e0 abitativa from the commune where you live. The documents are related to the living conditions, energy efficiency, and a property plan. In most cases, the landlord or the real estate agent that rents the house is well aware of the documents required, so, just ask for them as early as possible.\n\nIn case of reunification in favor of only one child under 14, the municipal certificate can be replaced by a declaration of hospitality by the owner of the apartment. If the Immigration Desk issues the authorization, they will electronically forward it to the appropriate Italian embassy or consulate where your family members will submit the visa application.\n\nThe application for nulla osta must be submitted with all the documents attesting the applicant\u2019s eligibility. The competent authority must issue the nulla osta or notify its rejection within 60 days from the application submission.\n\n> If, on the other hand, the request is rejected, against the refusal of the authorization, it is possible to appeal to the ordinary Court of the place of residence of the applicant regularly residing in Italy.\n\nThe\u00a0Nulla Osta\u00a0is valid for six months. Your family members must apply for an Italian Family Visa at their home country within this period.\n\nPlease note: In case you are bringing your parent/s to Italy:\n\nOriginal copies of your birth certificate, proof your parent/s is dependent on you (such as money transfers), a written statement from your parent/s, declaring they are dependent on you. In the case in which the possession of the required conditions cannot be proved in a certain way through certificates issued by competent foreign authorities, or in any case of serious doubts on the authenticity of the above-mentioned documentation, the diplomatic or consular representations provide for the issue of certifications, on the basis of the DNA test and of necessary checks.\n\nThe application process for an Italian Family Visa goes as follows:\n\n 1. Book a visa appointment at an Italian embassy or consulate in their country.\n 2. Download and complete Italy Long-Stay Visa Application Form.\n 3. Gather all the necessary documents. For example proof of family relationship, as applicable: Birth certificates for children and marriage certificate for your spouse duly legalized.\n 4. When the date of the appointment comes, submit the application in person.\n 5. Pay the Italian visa fee.\n 6. Enter a visa interview.\n 7. Wait for processing.\n\nOnce the foreign national has received the visa for family reunification and entered Italy, he/she must go to the Sportello Unico per l\u2019Immigrazione within 8 days and present the following documents to the competent post office.\n\n * An identity card;\n * The completed postal-kit with the payment of tax issuance;\n * A copy of the security clearance (Nulla Osta) to enter in Italy;\n * A copy of their Visa;\n * The whole passport.\n\nThe competent desk will issue a receipt with the data of the first appointment to the competent police Headquarters, for their personal appearance and the fingerprints. After this appointment, the police headquarters will contact them for the withdrawer of their electronic permit card.\n\nThe new comer should also go to the following offices to:\n\n * Municipality\u00a0(\u201cComune\u201d) of residence\u00a0to\u00a0apply to be registered in the Civil State Registrar \n * Azienda ASL\u00a0(local sanitary district) to apply to be registered in the National Health Service (to obtain the Health Card)\n\n#### Family Cohesion\n\nThe procedure for issuance of the relative authorization is similar to the procedure for issuance of the authorization for family reunification. The application must be sent electronically to the Single Desk for Immigration, by means of the online procedure available on the website of the Ministry of the Interior. Before you travel to Italy, you must prepare all the required documents\n\n1. Your marriage certificate OFFICIALLY translated into Italian AND legalized\n\n2. The birth certificates of your children OFFICIALLY translated into Italian AND legalized\n\nOfficial translations are made in the Italian Embassies or by authorized translators. The legalization can be done by the Italian Embassies or, if your home country has signed The Hague Agreement, with the \u201cApostille\u201d stamp applied by the competent Ministry of your country both on the original and on the translation into Italian.\n\n> \u00a0WITHOUT THIS DOCUMENTATION NO FAMILY COHESION WILL BE POSSIBLE AND YOUR FAMILY WILL HAVE TO GO BACK AT THE EXPIRY DATE OF THE

TOURIST VISA (up to max 90 DAYS).\n\nThe foreign national residing in Italy with a residence permit for family reasons has access to assistance services, study courses or vocational training, job opportunities.\n\nThe duration of the permit is the same as the duration of the permit for the foreign national who has applied for family reunification and it is possible to renew it along with the latter.\n\nWell, now you have more than a bit of information in case you are planning to bring your family to Italy either now or in the future. The process can be cumbersome for some; you may decide to employ the services of a migration lawyer, if you will.\n\nI would like to hear from you: What are your thoughts on this subject. Main eligibility requirements are:\n\n * availability of adequate housing and proof that the financial/maintenance requirement is met\n * provide documented proof of relationship to the person with a regular immigration status in Italy\n\nFamily members who qualify for a family permit (permesso di soggiorno per motivi familiari) are:\n\n * spouse, regularly married and of full legal age (at least 18);\n * children under 18 (also spouse\u2019s children provided the other parent consent is granted);\n * children over 18, only if financially dependent due to serious disability\n * financially dependent parents, provided they do not have any other children in their country of origin or\n * parents over 65 if they do not have any other children who can financially support them in their home country because of serious health reasons\n\n#### Family members of an EU national residing in Italy\n\nUnder the EU principle of freedom of movement and establishment, EU Citizens have the right to enter and stay freely in Italy subject to different procedures depending upon the intended length of stay (less or more than three months). Similar provisions apply to family members accompanying or joining the EU citizen. Family members of an EU national residing in Italy are entitled to obtain an Italian long-term Residence Permit (Carta di Soggiorno per familiare di cittadino comunitario).\n\nThe following family members are eligible to apply:\n\n * spouse;\n * a partner who has entered into a registered union with an EU/EEA citizen, legally recognized;\n * children under 21 years of age or financially dependent children, including those of the partner or spouse;\n * parents if financially dependent, including those of the partner or spouse.\n\n#### Rights of residence derived from a durable relationship with an EU citizen\n\nAn application is possible also for any other family members (under certain circumstances) and for the partner with whom the EU citizen has a durable relationship, duly attested.\n\nRead more\u00a0\u2192\u00a0\u301047\u2020Durable Relationship and Family Members \u201cby Analogy\u201d in the European Union\u3011\n\nWe can assist clients with every step of the family permit application process, from document\u00a0preparation until the collection of the residence permit.\u00a0\u301045\u2020Contact us\u3011\u00a0for a free quote, we would be delighted to help you reach your targets and goals.\n\n[Image 20]\n\n\u301048\u2020Giuditta Petreni\u3011\n\nGiuditta Petreni has over 10 years of experience in assisting companies and business investors with relocation of managers

However, there are a few considerations to keep in mind:\n\n1. Proof of Marriage Registration: While your marriage certificate is in the process of being registered, you might not yet have the formal documentation proving it has been recognized by Italian authorities. You can inquire at the office where you submit your marriage documentation if they can provide any form of receipt or temporary document that acknowledges your submission and processing.\n\n2. Submission for Residence Permit: Typically, you would need to show proof of your registered marriage when applying for a residence permit based on family reunification. If you receive a receipt or any official acknowledgment that your marriage certificate is being processed, this may suffice when applying for your residence permit. It's advisable to check with the local immigration office or Questura on whether this would be acceptable.\n\n3. Required Documents: When applying for the residence permit, ensure you have all other required documents ready, such as your passport, the Italian ID of your spouse (if applicable), proof of adequate housing, and possibly evidence of financial resources or health insurance, depending on the specific requirements of your local immigration office.\n\n4. Timing: Consider the timing of your application. If your residence permit application is based on family reasons and your spouse is an Italian citizen, the process may be more straightforward once your marriage is registered. However, starting the process with all available documentation is often better than waiting, especially given potential delays.\n\nIt's often useful to consult directly with the local immigration office or a legal advisor who specializes in immigration law in Italy to ensure that all procedural nuances are correctly addressed, and your applications are submitted with the best possible chance of success."]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true

Travel. Living.\n\n## Italy: work permit and requirements\n\n[Image 1: Flag of Italy]\n\nIn this article, I\u201911 guide you through the full application process for an Italian work permit. You\u201911 also get to see all the needed documents, types of authorization, cost and eligibility.\n\n## Requirements and eligibility\n\nWho needs to register as a job-seeker? If you are a citizen of any EU country, you can live and work in Italy without a permit. Italy is part of the EU. This means that all EU nationals can work without any authorization.\n\nAs an EU citizen, you only need a \u201cdeclaration of presence\u201d from a Questura or local police station. If you plan to stay longer than 3 months and you must also apply for a residence permit.\n\nAll foreign citizens from non-EU countries that want to work in Italian companies must possess a work permit. Non-EU citizens planning on working in Italy for more than 3 months must possess a work permit. You must already have a job before you can apply for a work visa in Italy.\n\n## Application for a work permit in Italy\n\nFor non-EU nationals, application for a work permit is divided into 3 easy steps. This is the procedure to obtain an Italian employment authorization:\n\n * Step 1: Find an Italian employer, business or co-operation that will hire you. Once you get the job, your employer will apply for your license. In Italy, only the employer can apply for and receive the license. Once the application has been approved, your employer will send the document to you.\n * Step 2: Apply for a work visa in an Italian embassy or consulate in your home country. If your application is approved, you can proceed to step 3.\n * Step 3: Fly to Italy and begin your application for a residence permit. The residence permit allows you [non-EU national] to live and find a job in the country. Your residence license will be issued 8 days after your arrival.\n\nIf you plan on working in Italy, make sure you apply early. The Italian Government has \u30106\u2020annual quotas\u2020www.integrazionemigranti.gov.it\u3011 that decide the amount of non-EU citizens that would possess.\u00a0\n\n## Types Of Work Permits In Italy\n\n[Image 2: person walking holding brown leather bag]\n\nOne of the reasons why \u30107\u2020Italy\u3011 is one of the best places to get employed in Europe is because they offer various visa types that fit many specific needs. If you are planning on working in Italy, these are the major types of work permits available in the country:\n\n * Seasonal;\n * Long-Term;\n * Subordinate;\n * Self-Employment.\n\nYou can find more information at the \u30108\u2020Italian Ministry of Interior\u2019s website\u2020www.interno.gov.it\u3011.\n\n### The Seasonal Work Permit\n\nThe seasonal work permit is an authorization that is quite easy to obtain. It is given to seasonal activity workers usually in agriculture and tourism. Any Italian co-operation based in any of these industries can hire foreign personnel using a seasonal employment visa. It is valid for 20 days to 3 months.\n\n### The Long-Term Permit\n\nThe long-term permit also called residence permit is the opposite of the seasonal work permit. This document allows the beneficiary to stay in Italy for an indefinite period. The best thing about long-term permit is that if the beneficiary leaves Italy, he/she can easily re-enter without applying for a visa.\n\n### The Subordinate Work Permit\u00a0\n\nThis type of work visa can only be obtained by the employer on behalf of the non-EU employee that wants a job in the Italian Republic. The company or employer is required to acquire clearance from the Immigration Department (Nulla Osta).\u00a0\n\n### Self-Employment Visa\n\nSelf-employment permit allows non-EU nationals to partake in any kind of job or start a business of its own. It is valid for up to 2 years.\n\n## Documents Needed For Work Permit Application in Italy\n\nThe application of the permit is handled by the Italian company employing the foreign worker. When applying for a work permit, these are the documents required by the Italian government to begin processing the Italian work permit for a non-EU citizen:\n\n * Evidence of accommodation in Italy;\n * A fiscal document of the company;\n * The company\u2019s certificate of incorporation;\n * The employee\u2019s salary statement.\n\nYou don\u2019t need to apply for a work permit, your employer will do that for you. You only need to apply for a work visa. When applying for this type of visa, you have to submit supporting documents that would validate your identity and prove your claim. Some of the documents to apply for an Italian work visa are:\n\n * Copy of the signed work contract;\n * Passport with at least two blank pages;\n * Diplomas or other certificates;\n * Visa payment receipt;\n * Accommodation in Italy;\n * A copy of your Nulla Osta;\n * Passport photographs;\n * Italian Long-Stay Visa Application form;\n * Bank statement or Proof of sufficient financial means.\n\nThe cost of an Italian work visa is \u20ac60. You need to pay this non-refundable fee before you can begin your application. All supporting documents must be legalized & translated by an Italian notary. Italian work visas are valid all through the contract duration, it is valid for a maximum of two years and can also be renewed and extended for up to five years.\n\n\u30109\u2020Italy\u3011, \u301010\u2020Living\u3011\n\n\u301011\u2020 Prev Post Estonia for studies\u3011\n\n\u301012\u2020Next Post India: Immigration to Europe\u3011\n\n* * *\n\n## Categories\n\n\u301013\u2020Austria\u3011 \u301014\u2020Business\u3011 \u301015\u2020Canada\u3011 \u301016\u2020China\u3011 \u301017\u2020Citizenship\u3011 \u301018\u2020Education\u3011 \u301019\u2020France\u3011 \u301020\u2020Germany\u3011 \u301021\u2020Immigration\u3011 \u301022\u2020Japan\u3011 \u301023\u2020Latvia\u3011 \u301024\u2020Life quality\u3011 \u301010\u2020Living\u3011 \u301025\u2020Retirement\u3011 \u301026\u2020Tourism\u3011 \u301027\u2020Travel\u3011 \u301028\u2020USA\u3011 \u301029\u2020Visa\u3011 \u301030\u2020visa denial\u3011 \u301031\u2020Work Permit\u3011\n\nCopyright \u00a9 2023 Immigration & Residency. You\u2019ll also get to see all the needed documents, types of authorization, cost and eligibility.\n\n## Requirements and eligibility\n\nWho needs to register as a job-seeker? If you are a citizen of any EU country, you can live and work in Italy without a permit. Italy is part of the EU. This means that all EU nationals can work without any authorization.\n\nAs an EU citizen, you only need a \u201cdeclaration of presence\u201d from a Questura or local police station. If you plan to stay longer than 3 months and you must also apply for a residence permit.\n\nAll foreign citizens from non-EU countries that want to work in Italian companies must possess a work permit. Non-EU citizens planning on working in Italy for more than 3 months must possess a work permit. You must already have a job before you can apply for a work visa in Italy.\n\n## Application for a work permit in Italy\n\nFor non-EU nationals, application for a work permit is divided into 3 easy steps. This is the procedure to obtain an Italian employment authorization:\n\n * Step 1: Find an Italian employer, business or co-operation that will hire you. Once you get the job, your employer will apply for your license. In Italy, only the employer can apply for and receive the license. Once the application has been approved, your employer will send the document to you.\n * Step 2: Apply for a work visa in an Italian embassy or consulate in your home country. If your application is approved, you can proceed to step 3.\n * Step 3: Fly to Italy and begin your application for a residence permit. The residence permit allows you [non-EU national] to live and find a job in the country. Your residence license will be issued 8 days after your arrival.\n\nIf you plan on working in Italy, make sure you apply early. The Italian Government has \u30106\u2020annual quotas\u2020www.integrazionemigranti.gov.it\u3011 that decide the amount of non-EU citizens that would possess.\u00a0\n\n## Types Of Work Permits In Italy\n\n[Image 2: person walking holding brown leather bag]\n\nOne of the reasons why \u30107\u2020Italy\u3011 is one of the best places to get employed in Europe is because they offer various visa types that fit many specific needs. If you are planning on working in Italy, these are the major types of work permits available in the country:\n\n * Seasonal;\n * Long-Term;\n * Subordinate;\n * Self-Employment.\n\nYou can find more information at the \u30108\u2020Italian Ministry of Interior\u2019s website\u2020www.interno.gov.it\u3011.\n\n### The Seasonal Work Permit\n\nThe seasonal work permit is an authorization that is quite easy to obtain. It is given to seasonal activity workers usually in agriculture and tourism. Any Italian co-operation based in any of these industries can hire foreign personnel using a seasonal employment visa. It is valid for 20 days to 3 months.\n\n### The Long-Term Permit\n\nThe long-term permit also called residence permit is the opposite of the seasonal work permit. This document allows the beneficiary to stay in Italy for an indefinite period. The best thing about long-term permit is that if the beneficiary leaves Italy, he/she can easily re-enter without applying for a visa.\n\n### The Subordinate Work Permit\u00a0\n\nThis type of work visa can only be obtained by the employer on behalf of the non-EU employee that wants a job in the Italian Republic. The company or employer is required to acquire clearance from the Immigration Department (Nulla Osta).\u00a0\n\n### Self-Employment Visa\n\nSelf-employment permit allows non-EU nationals to partake in any kind of job or start a business of its own. It is valid for up to 2 years.\n\n## Documents Needed For Work Permit Application in Italy\n\nThe application of the permit is handled by the Italian company employing the foreign worker. When applying for a work permit, these are the documents required by the Italian government to begin processing the Italian work permit for a non-EU citizen:\n\n * Evidence of accommodation in Italy;\n * A fiscal document of the company;\n * The company\u2019s certificate of incorporation;\n * The employee\u2019s salary statement.\n\nYou don\u2019t need to apply for a work permit, your employer will do that for you. You only need to apply for a work visa. When applying for this type of visa, you have to submit supporting documents that would validate your identity and prove your claim. Some of the documents to apply for an Italian work visa are:\n\n * Copy of the signed work contract;\n * Passport with at least two blank pages;\n * Diplomas or other certificates;\n * Visa payment receipt;\n * Accommodation in Italy;\n * A copy of your Nulla Osta;\n * Passport photographs;\n * Italian Long-Stay Visa Application form;\n * Bank statement or Proof of sufficient financial means.\n\nThe cost of an Italian work visa is \u20ac60. You need to pay this non-refundable fee before you can begin your application. All supporting documents must be legalized & translated by an Italian notary. Italian work visas are valid all through the contract duration, it is valid for a maximum of two years and can also be renewed and extended for up to five years.\n\n\u30109\u2020Italy\u3011, \u301010\u2020Living\u3011\n\n\u301011\u2020 Prev Post Estonia for studies\u3011\n\n\u301012\u2020Next Post India: Immigration to Europe\u3011\n\n* * *\n\n## Categories\n\n\u301013\u2020Austria\u3011 \u301014\u2020Business\u3011 \u301015\u2020Canada\u3011 \u301016\u2020China\u3011 \u301017\u2020Citizenship\u3011 \u301018\u2020Education\u3011 \u301019\u2020France\u3011 \u301020\u2020Germany\u3011 \u301021\u2020Immigration\u3011 \u301022\u2020Japan\u3011 \u301023\u2020Latvia\u3011 \u301024\u2020Life quality\u3011 \u301010\u2020Living\u3011 \u301025\u2020Retirement\u3011 \u301026\u2020Tourism\u3011 \u301027\u2020Travel\u3011 \u301028\u2020USA\u3011 \u301029\u2020Visa\u3011 \u301030\u2020visa denial\u3011 \u301031\u2020Work Permit\u3011\n\nCopyright \u00a9 2023 Immigration & Residency. There are different types of permits that give you the right to work legally. You can also convert a different permit into a work residence permit. Read the article for more information.\n\nAccording to Italian law, non-EU citizens or cittadini extracomunitari (those who come from countries outside the European Union) can legally enter and / or work in Italy with these permits:\n\n 1. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Autonomo.\u00a0Residence permit for self-employment: for people who are not employed by a company.\n 2. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Subordinato.\u00a0Residence permit for subordinate work: for people who are employed by a company (including domestic workers) and seasonal jobs (jobs related to the tourism-hospitality and agricultural sector).\n 3. Residence permit for other specific cases, for example studying or training. Even with this type of permit you are entitled to work..\n\nWith a work residence permit you also have other rights, such as: access to the health system, school and education, family reunification requests, etc.\n\n## What are the requirements for obtaining a residence permit for work?\n\nGenerally, to obtain a residence permit for work reasons you must have:\n\n * A passport or another valid identification document;\n * Regular entry to Italy with a visa (except for special cases governed by the Immigration Act called Testo Unico sull\u2019Immigrazione);\n * Having applied for a residence permit within 8 working days of entering Italy.\n\nThen there are specific rules that change depending on the residence permit you want to apply for:\n\n### 1. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Autonomo \u2013 Residence Permit for Self-Employment\n\n * Documents showing that you have a legal work activity in Italy;\n * Have an annual income that is at least equal to the amount that exempts you from health care costs. For the year 2021, that is equal to 8,263.31 euros.\n * Prove that you have a house where you live. It\u2019s okay even if you are a guest at another person\u2019s home. In this case, the owner or the person renting the house, must write a statement where they say that you are living in their house.\n\nThe duration of the permesso di soggiorno per lavoro autonomo is 2 years. This permit can be renewed by showing the updated documents that are mentioned above.\n\n### 2. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Subordinato \u2013 Residence permit for subordinate work\n\n * A fixed-term or permanent employment contract;\n * Have an annual income equal to the minimum social income (reddito sociale minimo). For the year 2021, that is equal to 5,983.64 euros;\n * Prove that you have a house where you live. It\u2019s okay even if you are a guest at another person\u2019s home. In this case, the owner or the person renting the house, must write a statement where they say that you are living in their house.\n\nThe duration of the permesso per lavoro subordinato depends on the employment contract but generally cannot exceed:\n\n * 9 months for one or several seasonal work contracts;\n * 1 year for fixed-term subordinate employment contracts (lavoro subordinato a tempo determinato);\n * 2 years for permanent employment contracts (lavoro subordinato a tempo indeterminato).\n\nThis permit (permesso per lavoro subordinato) can be renewed.\n\n### 3. Permesso di Soggiorno per Motivi di Studio o Formazione \u2013 Residence Permit for Study or Training

Reasons\n\nYou can work even with the study permit. However, your work must not be more than 20 hours per week. \nYou can obtain a residence permit for study or training purposes:\n\n * After arriving to Italy with a\u00a0\u301019\u2020visa for study purposes\u2020www2.immigrazione.regione.toscana.it\u3011;\n * Or if you convert your previous residence permit for family reasons (permesso di soggiorno per motivi familiari), or permit for minors or foster care (permesso per minore et\u00e0 o affidamento).\n\nThe duration of the residence permit for study is one year and can be renewed for another three years beyond the years of the course you have chosen.\n\nImportant: you can change your study permit into a work permit only through the quotas decided in the decreto flussi. In some specific cases, you can do it without waiting for the decreto flussi, after a degree program like: laurea triennale, specialistica, etc.\n\n## Can I convert my residence permit into a permit for work reasons?\n\nConverting the residence permit means changing the type of permit you already have and requesting a permit to work legally in Italy. \nThe conversion application is made at the Sportello Unico per l\u2019Immigrazione. The procedure may change depending on the type of permit you have and the one you want to apply for. It usually takes a few months for the permit to be converted.\n\nGenerally, to convert a residence permit into one for work reasons you must have:\n\n * A valid (not expired) residence permit;\n * A valid (not expired) passport;\n * An employment contract or another document to prove that you have a job;\n * Prove that you have a minimum annual income.\n\nDepending on your situation, you may also be asked for other documents in addition to those on the list.\n\n## Which residence permits can be converted into work permits?\n\nAccording to the latest Italian laws you can ask for one of these residence permits to be converted into a work permit:\n\n * Residence permit for special protection \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per protezione speciale;\n * Residence permit for natural disasters \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per calamit\u00e0 naturali;\n * Residence permit for medical treatment \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per cure mediche;\n * Residence permit for minors assistance \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per assistenza minori;\n * Residence permit for religious reasons \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per motivi religiosi;\n * Residence permit for sporting activities \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per attivit\u00e0 sportiva;\n * Residence permit for artistic work \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per lavoro di artistico;\n * Residence permit for acquiring citizenship or statelessness \u2013 cittadinanza o dello stato di apolide (tranne i casi in cui lo straniero era precedentemente in possesso di un permesso per richiesta asilo).\n\nRemember that to change some residence permits, you need to find out about \u301020\u2020the decreto flussi\u3011. The decreto flussi is the law with which the Italian government decides how many residence permits can be converted into work permits each year. \nThere are also special cases where it is not necessary to wait for the decreto flussi to convert your permit. For example, if you have a study permit and have obtained a degree in Italy, you can convert it at any time.\n\nIf you have refugee status or are a holder of subsidiary protection, you can ask to convert your residence permit into a work permit. But usually people don\u2019t do this because their refugee permit lasts 5 years and is valid even if people don\u2019t have jobs.\n\nAttention: The rules are many and they may change depending on the situation, so get well informed and ask for advice to a lawyer, an association or patronato/caf. \nTo find the local patronato, search online for the words: patronato + name of your city (for example:\u00a0patronato Firenze).\n\nTo find the immigration office of your Comune, search online by typing: \nUfficio immigrazione + name of your city (for example:\u00a0Ufficio immigrazione Comune di Firenze).\n\n## Useful link\n\n * Residence permits for study, training or internship purposes.\n\n\u301021\u2020Go to the link\u2020www2.immigrazione.regione.toscana.it\u3011 \n * Conversion from study purposes to work purposes.\n\n\u301022\u2020Go to the link\u2020www.pratomigranti.it\u3011 \n\n## You might be interested in\n\n * The decreto flussi\n\n\u301020\u2020See the article\u3011 \n * The permesso di soggiorno (residence permit)\n\n\u301023\u2020See the article\u3011 \n\n### Do you want to receive updates on our services and available information?\n\nSubscribe to our newsletter and join the ItaliaHello Community!\n\n\u00a0 \u301024\u2020 Ho letto l'Informativa privacy e accetto di ricevere e-mail da ItaliaHello \u3011 \n\nLeave this field empty if you're human: \n\n[Image 0] \n\n * Via Camillo Cavour 31 - Florence \nOther operational offices: \nRome-Milan \nCF 94276870485 \ninfo@ital", "title": "Residence permits for work purposes - ItaliaHello", "tether_id": null}, "status": "finished_successfully", "end_turn": null, "weight": 0.0, "metadata": {"_cite_metadata": {"citation_format": {"name": "tether_og"}, "metadata_list": [{"type": "webpage", "title": "Residence permits for work purposes - ItaliaHello", "url": "https://italiahello.it/en/articolo/residence-permits-for-work-purposes/", "text": " * \u301011\u2020Education\u3011\n * \u301012\u2020Work\u3011\n * \u301013\u2020Laws\u3011\n * \u301014\u2020Documents\u3011\n * \u301015\u2020News\u3011\n * \u301016\u2020Projects\u3011\n * \u301017\u2020Donate\u3011\n\n\u301018\u2020 Emergenza Ucraina: Informazioni utili per chi arriva in Italia - \u041d\u0430\u0434\u0437\u0432\u0438\u0447\u0430\u0439\u043d\u0430 \u0441\u0438\u0442\u0443\u0430\u0446\u0456\u044f \u0432 \u0423\u043a\u0440\u0430\u0457\u043d\u0456: \u041a\u043e\u0440\u0438\u0441\u043d\u0430 \u0456\u043d\u0444\u043e\u0440\u043c\u0430\u0446\u0456\u044f \u0434\u043b\u044f \u0442\u0438\u0445, \u0445\u0442\u043e \u043f\u0440\u0438\u0431\u0443\u0432\u0430\u0454 \u0434\u043e \u0406\u0442\u0430\u043b\u0456\u0457 - \u0423\u043a\u0440\u0430\u0438\u043d\u0430 \u0447\u0440\u0435\u0437\u0432\u044b\u�447\u0430\u0439\u043d\u0430\u044f \u0441\u0438\u0442\u0443\u0430\u0446\u0438\u044f: \u041f\u043e\u043b\u0435\u0437\u043d\u0430\u044f \u0438\u043d\u0444\u043e\u0440\u043c\u0430\u0446\u0438\u044f \u0434\u043b\u044f \u0442\u0435\u0445, \u043a\u0442\u043e \u043f\u0440\u0438\u0431\u044b\u0432\u0430\u0435\u0442 \u0432 \u0418\u0442\u0430\u043b\u0438\u044e \u3011 \n\n# Residence permits for work purposes\n\nThe residence permit for work purposes (permesso di soggiorno per motivi di lavoro) allows you to enter and work legally in Italy. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Autonomo.\u00a0Residence permit for self-employment: for people who are not employed by a company.\n 2. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Subordinato.\u00a0Residence permit for subordinate work: for people who are employed by a company (including domestic workers) and seasonal jobs (jobs related to the tourism-hospitality and agricultural sector).\n 3. Residence permit for other specific cases, for example studying or training. Even with this type of permit you are entitled to work..\n\nWith

a work residence permit you also have other rights, such as: access to the health system, school and education, family reunification requests, etc.\n\n## What are the requirements for obtaining a residence permit for work?\n\nGenerally, to obtain a residence permit for work reasons you must have:\n\n * A passport or another valid identification document;\n * Regular entry to Italy with a visa (except for special cases governed by the Immigration Act called Testo Unico sull\u2019Immigrazione);\n * Having applied for a residence permit within 8 working days of entering Italy.\n\nThen there are specific rules that change depending on the residence permit you want to apply for:\n\n### 1. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Autonomo \u2013 Residence Permit for Self-Employment\n\n * Documents showing that you have a legal work activity in Italy;\n * Have an annual income that is at least equal to the amount that exempts you from health care costs. For the year 2021, that is equal to 8,263.31 euros.\n * Prove that you have a house where you live. It\u2019s okay even if you are a guest at another person\u2019s home. In this case, the owner or the person renting the house, must write a statement where they say that you are living in their house.\n\nThe duration of the permesso di soggiorno per lavoro autonomo is 2 years. This permit can be renewed by showing the updated documents that are mentioned above.\n\n### 2. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Subordinato \u2013 Residence permit for subordinate work\n\n * A fixed-term or permanent employment contract;\n * Have an annual income equal to the minimum social income (reddito sociale minimo). For the year 2021, that is equal to 5,983.64 euros;\n * Prove that you have a house where you live. It\u2019s okay even if you are a guest at another person\u2019s home. In this case, the owner or the person renting the house, must write a statement where they say that you are living in their house.\n\nThe duration of the permesso per lavoro subordinato depends on the employment contract but generally cannot exceed:\n\n * 9 months for one or several seasonal work contracts;\n * 1 year for fixed-term subordinate employment contracts (lavoro subordinato a tempo determinato);\n * 2 years for permanent employment contracts (lavoro subordinato a tempo indeterminato).\n\nThis permit (permesso per lavoro subordinato) can be renewed.\n\n### 3. Permesso di Soggiorno per Motivi di Studio o Formazione \u2013 Residence Permit for Study or Training Reasons\n\nYou can work even with the study permit. However, your work must not be more than 20 hours per week. \nYou can obtain a residence permit for study or training purposes:\n\n * After arriving to Italy with a\u00a0\u301019\u2020visa for study purposes\u2020www2.immigrazione.regione.toscana.it\u3011;\n * Or if you convert your previous residence permit for family reasons (permesso di soggiorno per motivi familiari), or permit for minors or foster care (permesso per minore et\u00e0 o affidamento).\n\nThe duration of the residence permit for study is one year and can be renewed for another three years beyond the years of the course you have chosen.\n\nImportant: you can change your study permit into a work permit only through the quotas decided in the decreto flussi. In some specific cases, you can do it without waiting for the decreto flussi, after a degree program like: laurea triennale, specialistica, etc.\n\n## Can I convert my residence permit into a permit for work reasons?\n\nConverting the residence permit means changing the type of permit you already have and requesting a permit to work legally in Italy. \nThe conversion application is made at the Sportello Unico per l\u2019Immigrazione. The procedure may change depending on the type of permit you have and the one you want to apply for. It usually takes a few months for the permit to be converted.\n\nGenerally, to convert a residence permit into one for work reasons you must have:\n\n * A valid (not expired) residence permit;\n * A valid (not expired) passport;\n * An employment contract or another document to prove that you have a job;\n * Prove that you have a minimum annual income.\n\nDepending on your situation, you may also be asked for other documents in addition to those on the list.\n\n## Which residence permits can be converted into work permits?\n\nAccording to the latest Italian laws you can ask for one of these residence permits to be converted into a work permit:\n\n * Residence permit for special protection \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per protezione speciale;\n * Residence permit for natural disasters \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per calamit\u00e0 naturali;\n * Residence permit for medical treatment \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per cure mediche;\n * Residence permit for minors assistance \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per assistenza minori;\n * Residence permit for religious reasons \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per motivi religiosi;\n * Residence permit for sporting activities \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per attivit\u00e0 sportiva;\n * Residence permit for artistic work \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per lavoro di artistico;\n * Residence permit for acquiring citizenship or statelessness \u2013 cittadinanza o dello stato di apolide (tranne i casi in cui lo straniero era precedentemente in possesso di un permesso per richiesta asilo).\n\nRemember that to change some residence permits, you need to find out about \u301020\u2020the decreto flussi\u3011. The decreto flussi is the law with which the Italian government decides how many residence permits can be converted into work permits each year. \nThere are also special cases where it is not necessary to wait for the decreto flussi to convert your permit. For example, if you have a study permit and have obtained a degree in Italy, you can convert it at any time.\n\nIf you have refugee status or are a holder of subsidiary protection, you can ask to convert your residence permit into a work permit. But usually people don\u2019t do this because their refugee permit lasts 5 years and is valid even if people don\u2019t have jobs.\n\nAttention: The rules are many and they may change depending on the situation, so get well informed and ask for advice to a lawyer, an association or patronato/caf. \nTo find the local patronato, search online for the words: patronato + name of your city (for example:\u00a0patronato Firenze).\n\nTo find the immigration office of your Comune, search online by typing: \nUfficio immigrazione + name of your city (for example:\u00a0Ufficio immigrazione Comune di Firenze).\n\n## Useful link\n\n * Residence permits for study, training or internship purposes.\n\n\u301021\u2020Go to the link\u2020www2.immigrazione.regione.toscana.it\u3011 \n * Conversion from study purposes to work purposes.\n\n\u301022\u2020Go to the link\u2020www.pratomigranti.it\u3011 \n\n## You might be interested in\n\n * The decreto flussi\n\n\u301020\u2020See the article\u3011 \n * The permesso di soggiorno (residence permit)\n\n\u301023\u2020See the article\u3011 \n\n### Do you want to receive updates on our services and available information?\n\nSubscribe to our newsletter and join the ItaliaHello Community!\n\n\u00a0 \u301024\u2020 Ho letto l'Informativa privacy e accetto di ricevere e-mail da ItaliaHello \u3011 \n\nLeave this field empty if you're human: \n\n[Image 0] \n\n * Via Camillo Cavour 31 - Florence \nOther operational offices: \nRome-Milan \nCF 94276870485 \ninfo@ital", "pub_date": null, "extra": null}], "original_query": null}, "command": "mclick", "args": ["["0", "3", "10"]"], "status": "finished", "is_complete": true, "message_type": null, "model_slug": "gpt-4", "default_model_slug": "auto", "parent_id": "7ad0d368-c5aa-45b3-a9c0-e21536e71a1f", "request_id": "8a537291aed7baf7-MXP", "timestamp_": "absolute"}, "recipient": "all", "channel": null}, "parent": "7ad0d368-c5aa-45b3-a9c0-e21536e71a1f", "children": ["b06de749-c192-4a5d-abdc-089b7754f350"]}, "b06de749-c192-4a5d-abdc-089b7754f350":

There are different types of permits that give you the right to work legally. You can also convert a different permit into a work residence permit. Read the article for more information.\n\nAccording to Italian law, non-EU citizens or cittadini extracomunitari (those who come from countries outside the European Union) can legally enter and / or work in Italy with these permits:\n\n 1. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Autonomo.\u00a0Residence permit for self-employment: for people who are not employed by a company.\n 2. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Subordinato.\u00a0Residence permit for subordinate work: for people who are employed by a company (including domestic workers) and seasonal jobs (jobs related to the tourism-hospitality and agricultural sector).\n 3. Residence permit for other specific cases, for example studying or training. Even with this type of permit you are entitled to work..\n\nWith a work residence permit you also have other rights, such as: access to the health system, school and education, family reunification requests, etc.\n\n## What are the requirements for obtaining a residence permit for work?\n\nGenerally, to obtain a residence permit for work reasons you must have:\n\n * A passport or another valid identification document;\n * Regular entry to Italy with a visa (except for special cases governed by the Immigration Act called Testo Unico sull\u2019Immigrazione);\n * Having applied for a residence permit within 8 working days of entering Italy.\n\nThen there are specific rules that change depending on the residence permit you want to apply for:\n\n### 1. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Autonomo \u2013 Residence Permit for Self-Employment\n\n * Documents showing that you have a legal work activity in Italy;\n * Have an annual income that is at least equal to the amount that exempts you from health care costs. For the year 2021, that is equal to 8,263.31 euros.\n * Prove that you have a house where you live. It\u2019s okay even if you are a guest at another person\u2019s home. In this case, the owner or the person renting the house, must write a statement where they say that you are living in their house.\n\nThe duration of the permesso di soggiorno per lavoro autonomo is 2 years. This permit can be renewed by showing the updated documents that are mentioned above.\n\n### 2. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Subordinato \u2013 Residence permit for subordinate work\n\n * A fixed-term or permanent employment contract;\n * Have an annual income equal to the minimum social income (reddito sociale minimo). For the year 2021, that is equal to 5,983.64 euros;\n * Prove that you have a house where you live. It\u2019s okay even if you are a guest at another person\u2019s home. In this case, the owner or the person renting the house, must write a statement where they say that you are living in their house.\n\nThe duration of the permesso per lavoro subordinato depends on the employment contract but generally cannot exceed:\n\n * 9 months for one or several seasonal work contracts;\n * 1 year for fixed-term subordinate employment contracts (lavoro subordinato a tempo determinato);\n * 2 years for permanent employment contracts (lavoro subordinato a tempo indeterminato).\n\nThis permit (permesso per lavoro subordinato) can be renewed.\n\n### 3. Permesso di Soggiorno per Motivi di Studio o Formazione \u2013 Residence Permit for Study or Training Reasons\n\nYou can work even with the study permit. However, your work must not be more than 20 hours per week. \nYou can obtain a residence permit for study or training purposes:\n\n * After arriving to Italy with a\u00a0\u301019\u2020visa for study purposes\u2020www2.immigrazione.regione.toscana.it\u3011;\n * Or if you convert your previous residence permit for family reasons (permesso di soggiorno per motivi familiari), or permit for minors or foster care (permesso per minore et\u00e0 o affidamento).\n\nThe duration of the residence permit for study is one year and can be renewed for another three years beyond the years of the course you have chosen.\n\nImportant: you can change your study permit into a work permit only through the quotas decided in the decreto flussi. In some specific cases, you can do it without waiting for the decreto flussi, after a degree program like: laurea triennale, specialistica, etc.\n\n## Can I convert my residence permit into a permit for work reasons?\n\nConverting the residence permit means changing the type of permit you already have and requesting a permit to work legally in Italy. \nThe conversion application is made at the Sportello Unico per l\u2019Immigrazione. The procedure may change depending on the type of permit you have and the one you want to apply for. It usually takes a few months for the permit to be converted.\n\nGenerally, to convert a residence permit into one for work reasons you must have:\n\n * A valid (not expired) residence permit;\n * A valid (not expired) passport;\n * An employment contract or another document to prove that you have a job;\n * Prove that you have a minimum annual income.\n\nDepending on your situation, you may also be asked for other documents in addition to those on the list.\n\n## Which residence permits can be converted into work permits?\n\nAccording to the latest Italian laws you can ask for one of these residence permits to be converted into a work permit:\n\n * Residence permit for special protection \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per protezione speciale;\n * Residence permit for natural disasters \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per calamit\u00e0 naturali;\n * Residence permit for medical treatment \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per cure mediche;\n * Residence permit for minors assistance \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per assistenza minori;\n * Residence permit for religious reasons \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per motivi religiosi;\n * Residence permit for sporting activities \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per attivit\u00e0 sportiva;\n * Residence permit for artistic work \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per lavoro di artistico;\n * Residence permit for acquiring citizenship or statelessness \u2013 cittadinanza o dello stato di apolide (tranne i casi in cui lo straniero era precedentemente in possesso di un permesso per richiesta asilo).\n\nRemember that to change some residence permits, you need to find out about \u301020\u2020the decreto flussi\u3011. The decreto flussi is the law with which the Italian government decides how many residence permits can be converted into work permits each year. \nThere are also special cases where it is not necessary to wait for the decreto flussi to convert your permit. For example, if you have a study permit and have obtained a degree in Italy, you can convert it at any time.\n\nIf you have refugee status or are a holder of subsidiary protection, you can ask to convert your residence permit into a work permit. But usually people don\u2019t do this because their refugee permit lasts 5 years and is valid even if people don\u2019t have jobs.\n\nAttention: The rules are many and they may change depending on the situation, so get well informed and ask for advice to a lawyer, an association or patronato/caf. \nTo find the local patronato, search online for the words: patronato + name of your city (for example:\u00a0patronato Firenze).\n\nTo find the immigration office of your Comune, search online by typing: \nUfficio immigrazione + name of your city (for example:\u00a0Ufficio immigrazione Comune di Firenze).\n\n## Useful link\n\n * Residence permits for study, training or internship purposes.\n\n\u301021\u2020Go to the link\u2020www2.immigrazione.regione.toscana.it\u3011 \n * Conversion from study purposes to work purposes.\n\n\u301022\u2020Go to the link\u2020www.pratomigranti.it\u3011 \n\n## You might be interested in\n\n * The decreto flussi\n\n\u301020\u2020See the article\u3011 \n * The permesso di soggiorno (residence permit)\n\n\u301023\u2020See the article\u3011 \n\n### Do you want to receive updates on our services and available information?\n\nSubscribe to our newsletter and join the ItaliaHello Community!\n\n\u00a0 \u301024\u2020 Ho letto l'Informativa privacy e accetto di ricevere e-mail da ItaliaHello \u3011 \n\nLeave this field empty if you're human: \n\n[Image 0] \n\n * Via Camillo Cavour 31 - Florence \nOther operational offices: \nRome-Milan \nCF 94276870485 \ninfo@ital", "pub_date": null, "extra": {"cited_message_idx": 50, "search_result_idx": null, "evidence_text": "source", "cloud_doc_url": null}}}, {"start_ix": 1511, "end_ix": 1522, "citation_format_type": "tether_og", "metadata": {"type": "webpage", "title": "Residence permits that allow you to work in Italy | Mazzeschi Legal Counsels", "url": "https://www.mazzeschi.it/residence-permits-that-allow-you-to-work-in-italy/", "text": "\n * \u301037\u2020About\u3011 \n   * \n   * \n   * [Image 16]\n   * #### \u301038\u2020About Us\u3011\n\nFounded in 2007 specialized in Italian business immigration and citizenship law, corporate and commercial law.\n\n   * \n   * [Image 17]\n   * #### \u301039\u2020Our Team\u3011\n\nWith a multilingual team of experienced lawyers and paralegals, we can assist clients in all parts of the country.\n\n   * \n   * [Image 18]\n   * #### \u301040\u2020Firm News & Events\u3011\n\nLatest news and events of our firm.\n\n * \u301041\u2020Contact us\u3011\n\n\u30102\u2020Mazzeschi Legal Counsels\u3011\u00a0/\u00a0\u301033\u2020Insights\u3011\u00a0/\u00a0\u301042\u2020Articles\u3011\u00a0/\u00a0Residence permits that allow you to work in Italy\n\n# Residence permits that allow you to work in Italy\n\n###### Sep 29, 2023\n\n[Image 19]\n\nForeign nationals who intend to carry out working activities in Italy must hold a valid residence permit that specifically allows to work. Generally, residence permits that include the habilitation to work have the tag \u201cpermesso unico lavoro\u201d (residence permit for work). However, there are some residence permit types that do not have this tag specified on the card. Here are some of the common residence permits that authorize to work in Italy:\n\n 1. The most common ones: \n\n * Subordinate work residence permit\n\n   * Self-employed work residence permit\n\n 2. Long-Term EU residece permit: for those who have been residing legally in Italy for five years or more\n\n 3. Seasonal work permit: this permit allows individuals to work in specific seasonal sectors, such as agriculture or tourism, for a limited period.\n\n 4. Student residence permit: students enrolled in higher education institutions in Italy can work part-time (up to 20 hrs/week) during their studies.\n\n 5. Family permit: holders of residence permit for family reasons are allowed to work.\n\n 6. Job seekers permit: this permit is issued to those foreign nationals who, at the time of renewal of a residence permit for subordinate/student work purposes, do not have an employment yet but are registered as a job seekers in the Employment Centre Registry.\n\n 7. work visas and residence permits with special conditions and outside of the quota limits \n * Working-holiday visa: issued to holders of a working-holiday visa, which generally allows the a one-year maximum stay in Italy, as a tourist, and to carry out temporary work activities (without exceeding a total of 6 months and with no more than 3 months under the same employer).\n * EU blue card: for highly specialized non-EU workers hired in Italy.\n * Sports permit: for foreign athletes who need to move to Italy to perform professional activities for an Italian Sports Association. Work is allowed in this particular context only.\n * Work permits for temporary assignments (Intra company work permit, intra company transfers, service agreements)Research permit: issued to foreigners for the purposes of scientific research who are invited by a research institute (approved by the Ministry for Education, University an Research). The work activity is allowed only in the context of the agreement and research project).\n * Internship and professional training courses permits: these are special permits approved by the Italian Region and organized by accredited bodies.\u00a0 Internships are based on a convention between an accredited organization, which operates as an intermediary (such as Centres for Employment, Universities, scholar institutions, public centres of vocational training, etc.) and the public or private hosting employer.\n * Investor permit: granted to investors after positive assessment on a specific investment from the ministry of internal affairs and the Minisry of enterprises and made in Italy.\n\nHere is also a list of the permits that specifically do not allow to work:\n\n 1. Elective residence permit: this permit is for those who wish to reside in Italy without engaging in any work or business activities, it entails the reception of passive income only.\n 2. Medical care permit: for foreigners who have obtained visa to get medical treatment in an Italian public or private facility.\n 3. Religious motives permit\n 4. Awaiting citizenship permit: for those foreigners already residents in Italy and who are eligible for Italian citizenship (they must have already filed their application for citizenship).\n\nThis article was written by \u301043\u2020Louise D. There are different types of permits that give you the right to work legally. You can also convert a different permit into a work residence permit. Read the article for more information.\n\nAccording to Italian law, non-EU citizens or cittadini extracomunitari (those who come from countries outside the European Union) can legally enter and / or work in Italy with these permits:\n\n 1. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Autonomo.\u00a0Residence permit for self-employment: for people who are not employed by a company.\n 2. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Subordinato.\u00a0Residence permit for subordinate work: for people who are employed by a company (including domestic workers) and seasonal jobs (jobs related to the tourism-hospitality and agricultural sector).\n 3. Residence permit for other specific cases, for example studying or training. Even with this type of permit you are entitled to work..\n\nWith a work residence permit you also have other rights, such as: access to the health system, school and education, family reunification requests, etc.\n\n## What are the requirements for obtaining a residence permit for work?\n\nGenerally, to obtain a residence permit for work reasons you must have:\n\n * A passport or another valid identification document;\n * Regular entry to Italy with a visa (except for special cases governed by the Immigration Act called Testo Unico sull\u2019Immigrazione);\n * Having applied for a residence permit within 8 working days of entering Italy.\n\nThen there are specific rules that change depending on the residence permit you want to apply for:\n\n### 1. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Autonomo \u2013 Residence Permit for Self-Employment\n\n * Documents showing that you have a legal work activity in Italy;\n * Have an annual income that is at least equal to the amount that exempts you from health care costs. For the year 2021, that is equal to 8,263.31 euros.\n * Prove that you have a house where you live. It\u2019s okay even if you are a guest at another person\u2019s home. In this case, the owner or the person renting the house, must write a statement where they say that you are living in their house.\n\nThe duration of the permesso di soggiorno per lavoro autonomo is 2 years. This permit can be renewed by showing the updated documents that are mentioned above.\n\n### 2. Permesso di Soggiorno per Lavoro Subordinato \u2013 Residence permit for subordinate work\n\n * A fixed-term or permanent employment contract;\n * Have an annual income equal to the minimum social income (reddito sociale minimo). For the year 2021, that is equal to 5,983.64 euros;\n * Prove that you have a house where you live. It\u2019s okay even if you are a guest at another person\u2019s home. In this case, the owner or the person renting the house, must write a statement where they say that you are living in their house.\n\nThe duration of the permesso per lavoro subordinato depends on the employment contract but generally cannot exceed:\n\n * 9 months for one or several seasonal work contracts;\n * 1 year for fixed-term subordinate employment contracts (lavoro subordinato a tempo determinato);\n * 2 years for permanent employment contracts (lavoro subordinato a tempo indeterminato).\n\nThis permit (permesso per lavoro subordinato) can be renewed.\n\n### 3. Permesso di Soggiorno per Motivi di Studio o Formazione \u2013 Residence Permit for Study or Training Reasons\n\nYou can work even with the study permit. However, your work must not be more than 20 hours per week. \nYou can obtain a residence permit for study or training purposes:\n\n * After arriving to Italy with a\u00a0\u301019\u2020visa for study purposes\u2020www2.immigrazione.regione.toscana.it\u3011;\n * Or if you convert your previous residence permit for family reasons (permesso di soggiorno per motivi familiari), or permit for minors or foster care (permesso per minore et\u00e0 o affidamento).\n\nThe duration of the residence permit for study is one year and can be renewed for another three years beyond the years of the course you have chosen.\n\nImportant: you can change your study permit into a work permit only through the quotas decided in the decreto flussi. In some specific cases, you can do it without waiting for the decreto flussi, after a degree program like: laurea triennale, specialistica, etc.\n\n## Can I convert my residence permit into a permit for work reasons?\n\nConverting the residence permit means changing the type of permit you already have and requesting a permit to work legally in Italy. \nThe conversion application is made at the Sportello Unico per l\u2019Immigrazione. The procedure may change depending on the type of permit you have and the one you want to apply for. It usually takes a few months for the permit to be converted.\n\nGenerally, to convert a residence permit into one for work reasons you must have:\n\n * A valid (not expired) residence permit;\n * A valid (not expired) passport;\n * An employment contract or another document to prove that you have a job;\n * Prove that you have a minimum annual income.\n\nDepending on your situation, you may also be asked for other documents in addition to those on the list.\n\n## Which residence permits can be converted into work permits?\n\nAccording to the latest Italian laws you can ask for one of these residence permits to be converted into a work permit:\n\n * Residence permit for special protection \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per protezione speciale;\n * Residence permit for natural disasters \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per calamit\u00e0 naturali;\n * Residence permit for medical treatment \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per cure mediche;\n * Residence permit for minors assistance \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per assistenza minori;\n * Residence permit for religious reasons \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per motivi religiosi;\n * Residence permit for sporting activities \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per attivit\u00e0 sportiva;\n * Residence permit for artistic work \u2013 Permesso di soggiorno per lavoro di artistico;\n * Residence permit for acquiring citizenship or statelessness \u2013 cittadinanza o dello stato di apolide (tranne i casi in cui lo straniero era precedentemente in possesso di un permesso per richiesta asilo).\n\nRemember that to change some residence permits, you need to find out about \u301020\u2020the decreto flussi\u3011. The decreto flussi is the law with which the Italian government decides how many residence permits can be converted into work permits each year. \nThere are also special cases where it is not necessary to wait for the decreto flussi to convert your permit. For example, if you have a study permit and have obtained a degree in Italy, you can convert it at any time.\n\nIf you have refugee status or are a holder of subsidiary protection, you can ask to convert your residence permit into a work permit. But usually people don\u2019t do this because their refugee permit lasts 5 years and is valid even if people don\u2019t have jobs.\n\nAttention: The rules are many and they may change depending on the situation, so get well informed and ask for advice to a lawyer, an association or patronato/caf. \nTo find the local patronato, search online for the words: patronato + name of your city (for example:\u00a0patronato Firenze).\n\nTo find the immigration office of your Comune, search online by typing: \nUfficio immigrazione + name of your city (for example:\u00a0Ufficio immigrazione Comune di Firenze).\n\n## Useful link\n\n * Residence permits for study, training or internship purposes.\n\n\u301021\u2020Go to the link\u2020www2.immigrazione.regione.toscana.it\u3011 \n * Conversion from study purposes to work purposes.\n\n\u301022\u2020Go to the link\u2020www.pratomigranti.it\u3011 \n\n## You might be interested in\n\n * The decreto flussi\n\n\u301020\u2020See the article\u3011 \n * The permesso di soggiorno (residence permit)\n\n\u301023\u2020See the article\u3011 \n\n### Do you want to receive updates on our services and available information?\n\nSubscribe to our newsletter and join the ItaliaHello Community!\n\n\u00a0 \u301024\u2020 Ho letto l'Informativa privacy e accetto di ricevere e-mail da ItaliaHello \u3011 \n\nLeave this field empty if you're human: \n\n[Image 0] \n\n * Via Camillo Cavour 31 - Florence \nOther operational offices: \nRome-Milan \nCF 94276870485 \ninfo@ital"}, {"matched_text": "\u301051\u2020source\u3011", "start_idx": 1511, "end_idx": 1522, "alt": null, "type": "webpage_extended", "title": "Residence permits that allow you to work in Italy | Mazzeschi Legal Counsels", "url": "https://www.mazzeschi.it/residence-permits-that-allow-you-to-work-in-italy/", "pub_date": null, "snippet": "\n * \u301037\u2020About\u3011 \n   * \n   * \n * [Image 16]\n   * #### \u301038\u2020About Us\u3011\n\nFounded in 2007 specialized in Italian business immigration and citizenship law, corporate and commercial law.\n\n   * \n   * [Image 17]\n   * #### \u301039\u2020Our Team\u3011\n\nWith a multilingual team of experienced lawyers and paralegals, we can assist clients in all parts of the country.\n\n   * \n   * [Image 18]\n * #### \u301040\u2020Firm News & Events\u3011\n\nLatest news and events of our firm.\n\n * \u301041\u2020Contact us\u3011\n\n\u30102\u2020Mazzeschi Legal Counsels\u3011\u00a0/\u00a0\u301033\u2020Insights\u3011\u00a0/\u00a0\u301042\u2020Articles\u3011\u00a0/\u00a0Residence permits that allow you to work in Italy\n\n# Residence permits that allow you to work in Italy\n\n###### Sep 29, 2023\n\n[Image 19]\n\nForeign nationals who intend to carry out working activities in Italy must hold a valid residence permit that specifically allows to work. Generally, residence permits that include the habilitation to work have the tag \u201cpermesso unico lavoro\u201d (residence permit for work). However, there are some residence permit types that do not have this tag specified on the card. Here are some of the common residence permits that authorize to work in Italy:\n\n 1. The most common ones: \n\n * Subordinate work residence permit\n\n * Self-employed work residence permit\n\n 2. Long-Term EU residece permit: for those who have been residing legally in Italy for five years or more\n\n 3. Seasonal work permit: this permit allows individuals to work in specific seasonal sectors, such as agriculture or tourism, for a limited period.\n\n 4. Student residence permit: students enrolled in higher education institutions in Italy can work part-time (up to 20 hrs/week) during their studies.\n\n 5. Family permit: holders of residence permit for family reasons are allowed to work. \n\n 6. Job seekers permit: this permit is issued to those foreign nationals who, at the time of renewal of a residence permit for subordinate/student work purposes, do not have an employment yet but are registered as a job seekers in the Employment Centre Registry.\n\n 7. work visas and residence permits with special conditions and outside of the quota limits \n * Working-holiday visa: issued to holders of a working-holiday visa, which generally allows the a one-year maximum stay in Italy, as a tourist, and to carry out temporary work activities (without exceeding a total of 6 months and with no more than 3 months under the same employer).\n * EU blue card: for highly specialized non-EU workers hired in Italy.\n * Sports permit: for foreign athletes who need to move to Italy to perform professional activities for an Italian Sports Association. Work is allowed in this particular context only.\n * Work permits for temporary assignments (Intra company work permit, intra company transfers, service agreements)Research permit: issued to foreigners for the purposes of scientific research who are invited by a research institute (approved by the Ministry for Education, University an Research). The work activity is allowed only in the context of the agreement and research project).\n * Internship and professional training courses permits: these are special permits approved by the Italian Region and organized by accredited bodies.\u00a0 Internships are based on a convention between an accredited organization, which operates as an intermediary (such as Centres for Employment, Universities, scholar institutions, public centres of vocational training, etc.) and the public or private hosting employer.\n * Investor permit: granted to investors after positive assessment on a specific investment from the ministry of internal affairs and the Minisry of enterprises and made in Italy.\n\nHere is also a list of the permits that specifically do not allow to work:\n\n 1. Elective residence permit: this permit is for those who wish to reside in Italy without engaging in any work or business activities, it entails the reception of passive income only.\n 2. Medical care permit: for foreigners who have obtained visa to get medical treatment in an Italian public or private facility.\n 3. Religious motives permit\n 4. Awaiting citizenship permit: for those foreigners already residents in Italy and who are eligible for Italian citizenship (they must have already filed their application for citizenship).\n\nThis article was written by \u301043\u2020Louise D. Virgin Olive Oil Production\nI recently came across a TikTok video discussing a claim that the amount of olive oil available in stores exceeds the global production capacity of olive groves. This assertion suggested that perhaps olive oil is mislabeled or willfully misrepresented by manufacturers as olive oil when in reality they are some other cheaper more common oil like canola. The video suggested a test to determine the authenticity of olive oil by refrigerating it to see if it remained in a liquid state a characteristic of genuine extra virgin olive oil (EVOO). Intrigued by this I decided to investigate the claim myself focusing on my preferred brand Farchioni and investigating through the lens of authority and knowledge one might expect of Farchioni\u2019s Chief Sustainability Officer. Given the high demand and available agricultural resources are the current levels of EVOO production sustainable?\nBackground of EVOO Production\nItaly stands out as a leading producer of olive oil reflecting a rich blend of tradition and modernity in its agricultural practices. This duality is embodied in every bottle of olive oil such as my 1-liter bottle of extra virgin olive oil (EVOO) from Farchioni which I recently placed in the fridge to chill. As I waited to observe the results of my experiment I reflected on Farchioni\u2019s claims of harmoniously combining age-old techniques with contemporary methods to meet today's sustainability standards (Sustainability n.d.). This integration helps maintain the ecological balance and ensures the survival of traditional practices cherished across generations.\nFarchioni a prominent figure in the olive oil market serves as a prime example of the successful integration of tradition and modernity in EVOO production. Their production process combines advanced machinery to enhance efficiency and reduce waste with traditional methods like hand-picking and first-cold-pressing (Sustainability n.d.) . These traditional methods are crucial for maintaining the distinct quality and authenticity of their EVOO setting a benchmark for sustainable production in the industry. Farchioni's approach reflects a broader commitment across Italy to innovate while preserving the integrity of the olive oil heritage. \nAs the olive oil industry evolves regions like Umbria where Farchioni's farms are located encounter their share of challenges. These include high operational costs and an aging workforce which necessitate further technological advancements. Modern tools like open-source spectrophotometers and AI are now being used to enhance traceability and ensure the purity of EVOO (Bayreuth n.d.; Violino et al. 2020). These technologies strengthen the 'Made in Italy' label a crucial asset in the global marketplace and drive significant environmental improvements. For instance optimizing distribution and updating packaging materials are proposed to reduce the carbon footprint of EVOO production (Pisanelli et al. 2023) . This paints a picture of a future where tradition and innovation continue to merge ensuring the sustainability and authenticity of Italian olive oil on a global scale.\nSustainability Metrics and Indicator Analysis\nTo comprehensively assess the sustainability of extra virgin olive oil (EVOO) production it is essential to consider a range of indicators that align with the seven principles of sustainability: efficiency substitution economic environmental social sustainability inter-generational equity and institutional sustainability. These principles can be measured using specific metrics such as material and energy intensity water consumption emission of toxic substances human health implications fair labor practices and the overall impact on the community. These metrics help in evaluating the breadth and depth of sustainability practices within the EVOO production process and are critical for making informed decisions aimed at improving sustainability outcomes over time (Maesano et al. 2021; Safeie-Noghlbari et al. 2024).\nIn the context of material intensity EVOO production demands significant resources particularly in packaging and equipment. Commonly used for oil bottling glass is energy-intensive to produce and contributes to higher CO2 emissions. This highlights the need for more sustainable packaging solutions such as recycled or lighter glass which could decrease material intensity and environmental impact (Maesano et al. 2021; Rinaldi et al. 2014; Salomone & Ioppolo 2012). Similarly the metals used in processing equipment also require consideration particularly in terms of the energy and resources consumed during their manufacture and eventual recycling or disposal (Hansen 2022; Pisanelli et al. 2023; Salomone & Ioppolo 2012)\nEnergy and water consumption are equally critical metrics. The operation of irrigation systems and processing facilities consumes substantial energy which can be mitigated by integrating renewable energy sources such as solar or wind power to reduce the carbon footprint of production processes (Allen et al. 1998; Hansen 2022; Rinaldi et al. 2014; Salomone & Ioppolo 2012). Concerning water consumption olive cultivation particularly in drier regions necessitates significant water usage. Employing sustainable water management practices such as adopting drip irrigation systems can dramatically decrease water consumption preserving vital water resources. Additionally using pesticides and fertilizers in olive farming introduces toxic emissions and pollutants that can affect soil and water quality. Implementing organic farming practices and optimizing transportation and logistics can help minimize these environmental impacts (Ivic et al. 2021; Maesano et al. 2021).\nBeyond environmental considerations the human dimension of sustainability is pivotal. Protecting human health and safety in EVOO production involves minimizing workers' exposure to harmful chemicals ensuring proper safety training and providing adequate protective equipment (Connor & Fereres 2010; Ncube et al. 2022). Furthermore adhering to labor laws and embracing fair trade practices are essential to guarantee fair wages and good working conditions for all employees. Finally the broader community impact of companies like Farchioni should be recognized as they often support local initiatives in education and healthcare contributing positively to the social fabric of their operating regions (Ncube et al. 2022). These efforts enhance community well-being and bolster the social sustainability of the business practices. By addressing these various sustainability indicators companies can comply with current standards and set new benchmarks for responsible production in the industry.\nSupply Chain Model\nThe supply chain for EVOO includes several stages: olive cultivation and harvesting processing and extraction packaging and storage and distribution and retail. Each stage presents unique sustainability challenges and opportunities. Improving energy efficiency in processing and adopting sustainable packaging materials can significantly enhance the product's overall sustainability (Maesano et al. 2021). Information Gaps and InferencesThere are notable gaps in available data particularly regarding comprehensive lifecycle assessments for EVOO production. Data on the environmental impacts of material extraction and processing is limited. However comparative analysis with similar agricultural products such as wine or almond production provides insights into potential sustainability impacts. Studies on these products show that organic farming practices and renewable energy usage can significantly reduce environmental footprints (Gennaro & Nardone 2014; Maesano et al. 2021).\nRole as Chief Sustainability Officer\nAs Farchioni\u2019s Chief Sustainability Officer several measures can be prioritized to enhance sustainability in the company's operations. These include enhancing energy efficiency and renewable energy use implementing sustainable water management practices improving waste management and reducing emissions and ensuring fair wages and safe working conditions. Progress can be measured by setting specific measurable goals conducting regular sustainability audits publicly reporting on sustainability performance engaging stakeholders and maintaining open communication about progress and challenges (Allen et al. 1998; Maesano et al. 2021; Safeie-Noghlbari et al. 2024; Salomone & Ioppolo 2012).\nConclusion\nReflecting on the initial question of whether the levels of EVOO production are sustainable the answer is complex. Farchioni's EVOO did not solidify in the refrigerator maintaining its same viscosity and overall physical properties indicating its authenticity (Bayreuth n.d.). However the sustainability of EVOO production can be significantly improved through targeted measures that address material and energy use water consumption emissions and social impacts. Cooperative resource allocation systems emphasizing community involvement and fair practices are essential for achieving long-term sustainability in the olive oil industry. By adopting these measures companies can contribute to a more sustainable future while maintaining the cultural and economic significance of EVOO production in Italy.\nReferences\nAllen R. G. These companies often source water from natural springs which can profoundly impact local water tables and ecosystems. The industry\u2019s reach is extensive with products distributed worldwide contributing to local economies through job creation and tax revenues. However the large-scale extraction of water raises concerns about the long-term sustainability of water resources necessitating a shift towards more sustainable practices (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020).\nImpact Assessment\nEnvironmental Impacts\nBottled water companies like Sanpellegrino's operational practices particularly those surrounding large-scale water extraction from natural springs are critical to its production process. This substantial extraction is necessitated by the high demand for bottled water a trend that shows no signs of abating (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020). However this practice raises significant concerns about the long-term sustainability of local water resources. Extracting such large volumes of water can deplete natural springs disrupt local ecosystems and exacerbate water scarcity issues particularly in regions already facing water stress (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020).\nIn light of these concerns it is imperative for companies like Sanpellegrino to explore alternative water sources and implement more sustainable water management practices. This could include investing in water conservation technologies improving the efficiency of water extraction processes and engaging in corporate responsibility initiatives that prioritize environmental sustainability (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020). By doing so Sanpellegrino can ensure its operations' sustainability while contributing to broader environmental conservation efforts.\nEnvironment Impacts\nEnvironmental impacts of the bottled water industry include the depletion of aquifers reduced stream flows and degradation of aquatic ecosystems. Intensive water extraction can lead to declines in local water tables affecting both human use and ecosystem health (Cuoco et al. 2015). Furthermore the extraction process can disrupt the natural balance of aquatic ecosystems leading to biodiversity loss and habitat degradation (van Engelenburg et al. 2018)\nIn addition the extraction process affects the quantity and quality of water available in local streams and rivers. Reduced water flow can lead to higher concentrations of pollutants and increased water temperatures adversely affecting aquatic life. Lower water tables can result in reduced soil moisture impacting local agriculture and vegetation (Bartolini et al. 2007; Ferragina 2010).\nThe ecological consequences of water extraction are further compounded by the reduced ability of the environment to recharge depleted aquifers. Natural recharge processes are often slower than the extraction rate leading to long-term sustainability issues. Over time this imbalance can result in permanent changes to the local ecosystem including the loss of biodiversity and the degradation of natural habitats (van Engelenburg et al. 2018).\nSocial Impacts\nThe social impacts of water bottling operations are significant affecting local communities in various ways. One of the most pressing social issues is the reduced access to water for local communities. As companies like Sanpellegrino extract vast quantities of water local residents often find their wells drying up or experiencing reduced water pressure. This can lead to conflicts over water use particularly in regions where water is already scarce (Ostrom 1998). While the water bottling industry generates substantial revenue the economic benefits often do not extend to local populations. Residents may face increased costs for water and might need to purchase bottled water for their own use effectively buying back their own resources at a premium price (Manzellaa et al. 2018).\nReduced water availability has significant health implications. Lower water quality can lead to a higher incidence of waterborne diseases impacting public health. Additionally reduced water availability affects agriculture a primary livelihood for many residents. Farmers may experience lower crop yields and increased difficulty maintaining livestock further exacerbating economic inequalities (D'ippoliti et al. 2015).\nEconomic Impacts\nThe economic impacts of the water bottling industry present a complex picture of benefits and costs (Bartolini et al. 2007). While the industry contributes to national economies by generating substantial revenue through taxes and employment it also incurs external costs related to environmental degradation and social issues (Bartolini et al. 2007; Sanpellegrino 2023).\nFor instance Sanpellegrino a major player in the industry reported revenues of over one billion Euros in 2022 significantly contributing to local and national economies (Sanpellegrino 2023). Moreover the bottling industry provides stable employment opportunities which can significantly benefit regions with limited job prospects. Sanpellegrino alone employs thousands of workers in its facilities and Bartolini et al. (2007) underscored the far-reaching effects of such employment opportunities. The study highlighted the positive implications of stable job opportunities provided by companies like Sanpellegrino supporting individuals and families with reliable incomes and stimulating local economic activity through increased consumer spending investment and tax revenues (Bartolini et al. 2007).\nHowever external costs such as environmental degradation and social costs are not typically accounted for in the industry's economic benefits. Local governments may incur additional expenses in managing water resources addressing health impacts and mitigating environmental damage caused by over-extraction (Cuoco et al. 2015). Such realities highlight the need to comprehensively assess the water bottling industry's economic impacts considering its benefits and external costs.\nRegulatory Frameworks and Policy Analysis\nThe regulatory landscape in Italy and the European Union is oriented towards the sustainable management of water resources. However there is a need for greater consistency in enforcement and effectiveness. Current legislation and policies often prioritize corporate interests over public and environmental health. For instance while regulations such as the Water Framework Directive (Directive 2000/60/EC) aim to safeguard water resources and foster sustainable water management practices there are discernible inconsistencies in enforcement and regulatory gaps that have the potential to compromise these objectives thus enabling companies like Sanpellegrino to continue extracting water at unsustainable rates (Aukidy et al. 2012).\nTo address these challenges it is essential to introduce more stringent regulatory measures. This could involve the implementation of tighter water extraction limits and the enforcement of compliance through regular monitoring consequently contributing to the protection of water resources. Furthermore the involvement of local communities in decision-making processes concerning water resource management is crucial as it ensures that their needs and rights are duly considered (Bartolini et al. 2007). If meticulously employed these approaches may prove instrumental in amplifying the efficacy of existing regulations and driving meaningful change in the sustainable management of water resources within Italy and the European Union.\nRecommendations for Sustainable Practices\nA comprehensive strategy is essential to address the significant environmental impacts associated with the water bottling industry. Firstly as previously discussed stricter regulatory measures are necessary to mitigate these impacts. This entails imposing more rigorous limits on water extraction and ensuring compliance through continuous monitoring (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020). These regulations should be based on scientific evaluations of sustainable extraction rates.\nSecondly community engagement in decision-making processes related to water resource management is crucial. As proposed by Spiliotopoulou and Roseland (2020) and grounded in the principles of Ostrom (1998) community-based water management models have been shown to balance corporate interests and public needs effectively. A more equitable distribution of resources can be achieved by actively involving residents businesses and other stakeholders in water management decisions.\nThirdly companies should invest significantly in conservation technologies including developing methods for recycling and reusing water within bottling plants. This approach can reduce water usage and enhance the efficiency of water extraction processes (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020). The incorporation of these advanced technologies not only demonstrates a commitment to sustainable practices but also aligns with the growing societal and environmental expectations for corporate responsibility and stewardship. Therefore companies that invest in these conservation technologies are better positioned to minimize their environmental footprint and positively impact their operational costs and long-term sustainability.\nFurthermore corporate environmental responsibility initiatives must be prioritized within the business world. Companies like Sanpellegrino must lead in promoting environmental sustainability and social equity. For example they could consider allocating resources to funding local water conservation projects and supporting infrastructure improvements (Bae & Kim 2022). This kind of proactive approach not only benefits the environment but also positively impacts the communities in which these companies operate.\nEmploying a multi-faceted approach to address environmental impacts by implementing rigorous regulations engaging with communities fostering technological innovation and promoting corporate responsibility initiatives is paramount (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020; McNabb 2019; Bae & Kim 2022). This approach can substantially contribute to the sustainable management of water resources advocating for environmental sustainability and social equity. Additionally analyzing the water bottling industry's environmental social and economic impacts highlights the broader implications of treating water as a commercial commodity. By reorienting the management of water resources to prioritize sustainability and equity we can ensure the long-term health of both the environment and local communities. Achieving this objective requires a collaborative effort among corporations governments and communities to develop and implement strategies that harmonize economic benefits with environmental and social responsibilities.\n\nReferences\nAukidy M. This assignment showcases an in-depth understanding of the theories related to resource management, particularly focusing on the challenges and sustainability practices within the bottled water industry.\n\n1. Foundational Theories and Resource Management:\n\nThe assignment draws on several foundational theories related to the management of common resources, including the Tragedy of the Commons, Elinor Ostrom's principles of collective action, and the regulatory frameworks governing resource extraction. The analysis highlights the following key aspects:\n\n- Tragedy of the Commons: The report illustrates the concept through the large-scale extraction of water by companies like Sanpellegrino, which leads to the depletion of natural aquifers and water scarcity issues. This reflects the classic example of overuse of a common resource leading to its degradation, as postulated by Garrett Hardin.\n\n- Ostrom's Principles of Collective Action: The recommendations for community engagement in water management decisions align with Ostrom's principles, which emphasize the importance of local participation and governance in managing common resources sustainably. This approach contrasts with top-down regulatory measures and suggests a more inclusive and effective management strategy.\n\n- Regulatory Frameworks: The discussion on existing regulatory measures, such as the Water Framework Directive in the European Union, and the need for stricter enforcement and consistency, provides a critical examination of current policies and their efficacy in managing water resources. This demonstrates an understanding of the legal and institutional frameworks that underpin resource management.\n\n2. Environmental, Social, and Economic Impacts:\n\nThe artifact evaluates the environmental, social, and economic impacts of the bottled water industry, providing a holistic view of resource management issues:\n\n- Environmental Impact: The depletion of aquifers, reduced stream flows, and habitat degradation are discussed in detail, showcasing an understanding of the ecological consequences of over-extraction. The analysis also explores the potential benefits of adopting water conservation technologies and sustainable extraction practices.\n\n- Social Impact: The report addresses the social ramifications, such as reduced access to water for local communities and health implications due to lower water quality. This reflects a thorough understanding of the social dimensions of resource management and the importance of equitable access to common resources.\n\n- Economic

Impact: The economic analysis includes both the benefits, like job creation and revenue generation, and the external costs, such as environmental degradation and social costs. This balanced approach illustrates a comprehensive understanding of the economic trade-offs involved in resource management.\n\n3. Application of Sustainability Measures:\n\nThe artifact demonstrates the application of various sustainability measures, such as investing in water recycling technologies, transitioning to renewable energy sources, and enhancing community engagement programs. These proposed measures highlight a proactive approach to mitigating the adverse effects of resource extraction and promoting sustainable practices.\n\nImprovement Analysis:\n\nWhile the artifact effectively demonstrates the achievement of the learning outcome, there are areas for potential improvement:\n\n- Greater Integration of Quantitative Data: Including more quantitative data on water extraction rates, local water table levels, and specific outcomes from implemented sustainability measures would strengthen the analysis and provide more concrete evidence of the impacts discussed.\n\n- Case Studies of Successful Community Management: Adding case studies of successful community-based water management initiatives could offer practical examples of Ostrom's principles in action, providing a more detailed comparison of different management approaches.\n\n- Long-Term Impact Analysis: Expanding the discussion to include long-term projections of environmental, social, and economic impacts under different management scenarios would offer a more comprehensive view of the potential outcomes of various approaches to resource management.\n\nIn conclusion, Assignment #2 - Bottled Water Industry Impact Assessment effectively demonstrates the learning outcome by comparing foundational theories and contrasting approaches to the management of "the commons" through a detailed analysis of the bottled water industry. The comprehensive examination of environmental, social, and economic impacts, coupled with practical recommendations for sustainable practices, showcases a strong grasp of resource management principles."]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true , "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"citations": [], "gizmo_id": null, "message_type": null, "model_slug": "gpt-4o", "default_model_slug": "gpt-4o", "pad": "AAA", "parent_id": "917f9e7e-1479-4478-9bb3-a99673ee8b8e", "finish_details": {"type": "stop", "stop_tokens": [200002]}, "is_complete": true, "request_id": "898abda41b1d4c54-MXP", "timestamp_": "absolute"}, "recipient": "all", "channel": null}, "parent": "917f9e7e-1479-4478-9bb3-a99673ee8b8e", "children": []}, "aaa20b60-d2c7-4667-b5f1-8d504f731ef4": {"id": "aaa20b60-d2c7-4667-b5f1-8d504f731ef4", "message": {"id": "aaa20b60-d2c7-4667-b5f1-8d504f731ef4", "author": {"role": "user", "name": null, "metadata": {}}, "create_time": 1719211425.954789, "update_time": null, "content": {"content_type": "text", "parts": ["based on the information gleaned from the attached rubric and attachenments provide a rational for having achieved this learning outcome with assignment 2 (attached.) This assertion suggested that perhaps olive oil is mislabeled or willfully misrepresented by manufacturers as olive oil when in reality they are some other cheaper more common oil like canola. The video suggested a test to determine the authenticity of olive oil by refrigerating it to see if it remained in a liquid state a characteristic of genuine extra virgin olive oil (EVOO). Intrigued by this I decided to investigate the claim myself focusing on my preferred brand Farchioni and investigating through the lens of authority and knowledge one might expect of Farchioni\u2019s Chief Sustainability Officer. Given the high demand and available agricultural resources are the current levels of EVOO production sustainable?\nBackground of EVOO Production\nItaly stands out as a leading producer of olive oil reflecting a rich blend of tradition and modernity in its agricultural practices. This duality is embodied in every bottle of olive oil such as my 1-liter bottle of extra virgin olive oil (EVOO) from Farchioni which I recently placed in the fridge to chill. As I waited to observe the results of my experiment I reflected on Farchioni\u2019s claims of harmoniously combining age-old techniques with contemporary methods to meet today's sustainability standards (Sustainability n.d.). This integration helps maintain the ecological balance and ensures the survival of traditional practices cherished across generations.\nFarchioni a prominent figure in the olive oil market serves as a prime example of the successful integration of tradition and modernity in EVOO production. Their production process combines advanced machinery to enhance efficiency and reduce waste with traditional methods like hand-picking and first-cold-pressing (Sustainability n.d.) . These traditional methods are crucial for maintaining the distinct quality and authenticity of their EVOO setting a benchmark for sustainable production in the industry. Farchioni's approach reflects a broader commitment across Italy to innovate while preserving the integrity of the olive oil heritage. \nAs the olive oil industry evolves regions like Umbria where Farchioni's farms are located encounter their share of challenges. These include high operational costs and an aging workforce which necessitate further technological advancements. Modern tools like open-source spectrophotometers and AI are now being used to enhance traceability and ensure the purity of EVOO (Bayreuth n.d.; Violino et al. 2020). These technologies strengthen the 'Made in Italy' label a crucial asset in the global marketplace and drive significant environmental improvements. For instance optimizing distribution and updating packaging materials are proposed to reduce the carbon footprint of EVOO production (Pisanelli et al. 2023) . This paints a picture of a future where tradition and innovation continue to merge ensuring the sustainability and authenticity of Italian olive oil on a global scale.\nSustainability Metrics and Indicator Analysis\nTo comprehensively assess the sustainability of extra virgin olive oil (EVOO) production it is essential to consider a range of indicators that align with the seven principles of sustainability: efficiency substitution economic environmental social sustainability inter-generational equity and institutional sustainability. These principles can be measured using specific metrics such as material and energy intensity water consumption emission of toxic substances human health implications fair labor practices and the overall impact on the community. These metrics help in evaluating the breadth and depth of sustainability practices within the EVOO production process and are critical for making informed decisions aimed at improving sustainability outcomes over time (Maesano et al. 2021; Safeie-Noghlbari et al. 2024).\nIn the context of material intensity EVOO production demands significant resources particularly in packaging and equipment. Commonly used for oil bottling glass is energy-intensive to produce and contributes to higher CO2 emissions. This highlights the need for more sustainable packaging solutions such as recycled or lighter glass which could decrease material intensity and environmental impact (Maesano et al. 2021; Rinaldi et al. 2014; Salomone & Ioppolo 2012). Similarly the metals used in processing equipment also require consideration particularly in terms of the energy and resources consumed during their manufacture and eventual recycling or disposal (Hansen 2022; Pisanelli et al. 2023; Salomone & Ioppolo 2012)\nEnergy and water consumption are equally critical metrics. The operation of irrigation systems and processing facilities consumes substantial energy which can be mitigated by integrating renewable energy sources such as solar or wind power to reduce the carbon footprint of production processes (Allen et al. 1998; Hansen 2022; Rinaldi et al. 2014; Salomone & Ioppolo 2012). Concerning water consumption olive cultivation particularly in drier regions necessitates significant water usage. Employing sustainable water management practices such as adopting drip irrigation systems can dramatically decrease water consumption preserving vital water resources. Additionally using pesticides and fertilizers in olive farming introduces toxic emissions and pollutants that can affect soil and water quality. Implementing organic farming practices and optimizing transportation and logistics can help minimize these environmental impacts (Ivic et al. 2021; Maesano et al. 2021).\nBeyond environmental considerations the human dimension of sustainability is pivotal. Protecting human health and safety in EVOO production involves minimizing workers' exposure to harmful chemicals ensuring proper safety training and providing adequate protective equipment (Connor & Fereres 2010; Ncube et al. 2022). Furthermore adhering to labor laws and embracing fair trade practices are essential to guarantee fair wages and good working conditions for all employees. Finally the broader community impact of companies like Farchioni should be recognized as they often support local initiatives in education and healthcare contributing positively to the social fabric of their operating regions (Ncube et al. 2022). These efforts enhance community well-being and bolster the social sustainability of the business practices. By addressing these various sustainability indicators companies can comply with current standards and set new benchmarks for responsible production in the industry.\nSupply Chain Model\nThe supply chain for EVOO includes several stages: olive cultivation and harvesting processing and extraction packaging and storage and distribution and retail. Each stage presents unique sustainability challenges and opportunities. Improving energy efficiency in processing and adopting sustainable packaging materials can significantly enhance the product's overall sustainability (Maesano et al. 2021). Information Gaps and InferencesThere are notable gaps in available data particularly regarding comprehensive lifecycle assessments for EVOO production. Data on the environmental impacts of material extraction and processing is limited. However comparative analysis with similar agricultural products such as wine or almond production provides insights into potential sustainability impacts. Studies on these products show that organic farming practices and renewable energy usage can significantly reduce environmental footprints (Gennaro & Nardone 2014; Maesano et al. 2021).\nRole as Chief Sustainability Officer\nAs Farchioni\u2019s Chief Sustainability Officer several measures can be prioritized to enhance sustainability in the company's operations. These include enhancing energy efficiency and renewable energy use implementing sustainable water management practices improving waste management and reducing emissions and ensuring fair wages and safe working conditions. Progress can be measured by setting specific measurable goals conducting regular sustainability audits publicly reporting on sustainability performance engaging stakeholders and maintaining open communication about progress and challenges (Allen et al. 1998; Maesano et al. 2021; Safeie-Noghlbari et al. 2024; Salomone & Ioppolo 2012).\nConclusion\nReflecting on the initial question of whether the levels of EVOO production are sustainable the answer is complex. Farchioni's EVOO did not solidify in the refrigerator maintaining its same viscosity and overall physical properties indicating its authenticity (Bayreuth n.d.). However the sustainability of EVOO production can be significantly improved through targeted measures that address material and energy use water consumption emissions and social impacts. Cooperative resource allocation systems emphasizing community involvement and fair practices are essential for achieving long-term sustainability in the olive oil industry. By adopting these measures companies can contribute to a more sustainable future while maintaining the cultural and economic significance of EVOO production in Italy.\nReferences\nAllen R. G. These companies often source water from natural springs which can profoundly impact local water tables and ecosystems. The industry\u2019s reach is extensive with products distributed worldwide contributing to local economies through job creation and tax revenues. However the large-scale extraction of water raises concerns about the long-term sustainability of water resources necessitating a shift towards more sustainable practices (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020).\nImpact Assessment\nEnvironmental Impacts\nBottled water companies like Sanpellegrino's operational practices particularly those surrounding large-scale water extraction from natural springs are critical to its production process. This substantial extraction is necessitated by the high demand for bottled water a trend that shows no signs of abating (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020). However this practice raises significant concerns about the long-term sustainability of local water resources. Extracting such large volumes of water can deplete natural springs disrupt local ecosystems and exacerbate water scarcity issues particularly in regions already facing water stress (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020).\nIn light of these concerns it is imperative for companies like Sanpellegrino to explore alternative water sources and implement more sustainable water management practices. This could include investing in water conservation technologies improving the efficiency of water extraction processes and engaging in corporate responsibility initiatives that prioritize environmental sustainability (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020). By doing so Sanpellegrino can ensure its operations' sustainability while contributing to broader environmental conservation efforts.\nEnvironment Impacts\nEnvironmental impacts of the bottled water industry include the depletion of aquifers reduced stream flows and degradation of aquatic ecosystems. Intensive water extraction can lead to declines in local water tables affecting both human use and ecosystem health (Cuoco et al. 2015). Furthermore the extraction process can disrupt the natural balance of aquatic ecosystems leading to biodiversity loss and habitat degradation (van Engelenburg et al. 2018)\nIn addition the extraction process affects the quantity and quality of water available in local streams and rivers. Reduced water flow can lead to higher concentrations of pollutants and increased water temperatures adversely affecting aquatic life. Lower water tables can result in reduced soil moisture impacting local agriculture and vegetation (Bartolini et al. 2007; Ferragina 2010).\nThe ecological consequences of water extraction are further compounded by the reduced ability of the environment to recharge depleted aquifers. Natural recharge processes are often slower than the extraction rate leading to long-term sustainability issues. Over time this imbalance can result in permanent changes to the local ecosystem including the loss of biodiversity and the degradation of natural habitats (van Engelenburg et al. 2018).\nSocial Impacts\nThe social impacts of water bottling operations are significant affecting local communities in various ways. One of the most pressing social issues is the reduced access to water for local communities. As companies like Sanpellegrino extract vast quantities of water local residents often find their wells drying up or experiencing reduced water pressure. This can lead to conflicts over water use particularly in regions where water is already scarce (Ostrom 1998). While the water bottling industry generates substantial revenue the economic benefits often do not extend to local populations. Residents may face increased costs for water and might need to purchase bottled water for their own use effectively buying back their own resources at a premium price (Manzellaa et al. 2018).\nReduced water availability has significant health implications. Lower water quality can lead to a higher incidence of waterborne diseases impacting public health. Additionally reduced water availability affects agriculture a primary livelihood for many residents. Farmers may experience lower crop yields and increased difficulty maintaining livestock further exacerbating economic inequalities (D'ippoliti et al. 2015).\nEconomic Impacts\nThe economic impacts of the water bottling industry present a complex picture of benefits and costs (Bartolini et al. 2007). While the industry contributes to national economies by generating substantial revenue through taxes and employment it also incurs external costs related to environmental degradation and social issues (Bartolini et al. 2007; Sanpellegrino 2023).\nFor instance Sanpellegrino a major player in the industry reported revenues of over one billion Euros in 2022 significantly contributing to local and national economies (Sanpellegrino 2023). Moreover the bottling industry provides stable employment opportunities which can significantly benefit regions with limited job prospects. Sanpellegrino alone employs thousands of workers in its facilities and Bartolini et al. (2007) underscored the far-reaching effects of such employment opportunities. The study highlighted the positive implications of stable job opportunities provided by companies like Sanpellegrino supporting individuals and families with reliable incomes and stimulating local economic activity through increased consumer spending investment and tax revenues (Bartolini et al. 2007).\nHowever external costs such as environmental degradation and social costs are not typically accounted for in the industry's economic benefits. Local governments may incur additional expenses in managing water resources addressing health impacts and mitigating environmental damage caused by over-extraction (Cuoco et al. 2015). Such realities highlight the need to comprehensively assess the water bottling industry's economic impacts considering its benefits and external costs.\nRegulatory Frameworks and Policy Analysis\nThe regulatory landscape in Italy and the European Union is oriented towards the sustainable management of water resources. However there is a need for greater consistency in enforcement and effectiveness. Current legislation and policies often prioritize corporate interests over public and environmental health. For instance while regulations such as the Water Framework Directive (Directive 2000/60/EC) aim to safeguard water resources and foster sustainable water management practices there are discernible inconsistencies in enforcement and regulatory gaps that have the potential to compromise these objectives thus enabling companies like Sanpellegrino to continue extracting water at unsustainable rates (Aukidy et al. 2012).\nTo address these challenges it is essential to introduce more stringent regulatory measures. This could involve the implementation of tighter water extraction limits and the enforcement of compliance through regular monitoring consequently contributing to the protection of water resources. Furthermore the involvement of local communities in decision-making processes concerning water resource management is crucial as it ensures that their needs and rights are duly considered (Bartolini et al. 2007). If meticulously employed these approaches may prove instrumental in amplifying the efficacy of existing regulations and driving meaningful change in the sustainable management of water resources within Italy and the European Union.\nRecommendations for Sustainable Practices\nA comprehensive strategy is essential to address the significant environmental impacts associated with the water bottling industry. Firstly as previously discussed stricter regulatory measures are necessary to mitigate these impacts. This entails imposing more rigorous limits on water extraction and ensuring compliance through continuous monitoring (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020). These regulations should be based on scientific evaluations of sustainable extraction rates.\nSecondly community engagement in decision-making processes related to water resource management is crucial. As proposed by Spiliotopoulou and Roseland (2020) and grounded in the principles of Ostrom (1998) community-based water management models have been shown to balance corporate interests and public needs effectively. A more equitable distribution of resources can be achieved by actively involving residents businesses and other stakeholders in water management decisions.\nThirdly companies should invest significantly in conservation technologies including developing methods for recycling and reusing water within bottling plants. This approach can reduce water usage and enhance the efficiency of water extraction processes (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020). The incorporation of these advanced technologies not only demonstrates a commitment to sustainable practices but also aligns with the growing societal and environmental expectations for corporate responsibility and stewardship. Therefore companies that invest in these conservation technologies are better positioned to minimize their environmental footprint and positively impact their operational costs and long-term sustainability.\nFurthermore corporate environmental responsibility initiatives must be prioritized within the business world. Companies like Sanpellegrino must lead in promoting environmental sustainability and social equity. For example they could consider allocating resources to funding local water conservation projects and supporting infrastructure improvements (Bae & Kim 2022). This kind of proactive approach not only benefits the environment but also positively impacts the communities in which these companies operate.\nEmploying a multi-faceted approach to address environmental impacts by implementing rigorous regulations engaging with communities fostering technological innovation and promoting corporate responsibility initiatives is paramount (Spiliotopoulou & Roseland 2020; McNabb 2019; Bae & Kim 2022). This approach can substantially contribute to the sustainable management of water resources advocating for environmental sustainability and social equity. Additionally analyzing the water bottling industry's environmental social and economic impacts highlights the broader implications of treating water as a commercial commodity. By reorienting the management of water resources to prioritize sustainability and equity we can ensure the long-term health of both the environment and local communities. Achieving this objective requires a collaborative effort among corporations governments and communities to develop and implement strategies that harmonize economic benefits with environmental and social responsibilities.\n\nReferences\nAukidy M. We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management:\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions:\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates that collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries according to local health reports. Studies have shown cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to significantly enhance community health and well-being (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\n\n\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for staff\t\nQ2 2025\t\nRegulatory hurdles securing partner cooperation\n\t\nLaunch Wellness Travel Packages\t\nDesign packages negotiate with travel agencies\t\nQ3 2025\t\nLogistics coordination ensuring accessibility and inclusion\n\t\nRollout Educational Programs\t\nDevelop curricula and integrate into schools\t\nQ4 2025\t\nAdaptation to local educational standards funding\n\t\nPublic Workshops and Seminars\t\nPlan and implement workshops and lifelong learning seminars\t\nQ1 2026\t\nCommunity engagement sustaining interest over time\n\n\nReferences\nCunningham W. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management:\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions:\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates that collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries according to local health reports. Studies have shown cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to significantly enhance community health and well-being (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\n\n\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for staff\t\nQ2 2025\t\nRegulatory hurdles securing partner cooperation\n\t\nLaunch Wellness Travel Packages\t\nDesign packages negotiate with travel agencies\t\nQ3 2025\t\nLogistics coordination ensuring accessibility and inclusion\n\t\nRollout Educational Programs\t\nDevelop curricula and integrate into schools\t\nQ4 2025\t\nAdaptation to local educational standards funding\n\t\nPublic Workshops and Seminars\t\nPlan and implement workshops and lifelong learning seminars\t\nQ1 2026\t\nCommunity engagement sustaining interest over time\n\n\nReferences\nCunningham W. We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management:\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions:\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates that collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries according to local health reports. Studies have shown cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to significantly enhance community health and well-being (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\n\n\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for discusses the need to understand relationships and feelings towards money. What does this mean to you? How would you describe your feelings toward money?Kara Logan Berlin underscores the significance of comprehending our personal relationships and feelings toward money a topic that resonates deeply with many of us especially those involved in fundraising (Berlin 2019). This understanding is pivotal as our emotions about money can profoundly impact our efficacy in raising funds for causes we hold dear.

Personally I value the freedom that money affords and acknowledge its role in supporting causes that align with my principles. However I also grapple with the capitalist system that prioritizes profit over communal welfare. My relationship with money is therefore nuanced; I see it as a necessary tool within our current societal structure but aspire to a future where our systems are not centered around monetary exchanges. This dual perspective informs my careful yet strategic approach to managing money ensuring it is utilized to bolster worthwhile initiatives without perpetuating the very systems I critique.\nPart B: Hall (2002) and Najev \u010ca\u010dija (2013) discussed the importance of relationship building in strategic fundraising. Discuss how you build relationships with others and tangible methods of maintaining those relationships.As per the theories of Hall (2002) and Najev \u010ca\u010dija (2013) successful fundraising hinges on the strategic establishment and upkeep of relationships. Hall delves into how community colleges leverage long-standing communal relationships to enhance their fundraising endeavors highlighting the importance of trust and mutual contentment in these interactions (Hall 2002). Similarly Najev \u010ca\u010dija merges marketing tactics with fundraising suggesting that understanding and aligning with the values and needs of potential donors can lead to more successful fundraising outcomes (Najev \u010ca\u010dija 2013). In my approach I place a premium on authentic engagement ensuring that interactions with potential donors and supporters are not just transactional but foster a deep sense of mutual understanding and respect. This involves actively listening to their values and aligning them with the goals of the initiatives I endorse thereby establishing a robust foundation for ongoing partnership and support.\nPart C: Identify five important elements of fundraising that require strategic planning? Discuss how you would begin to plan for them?\nFive pivotal elements of fundraising necessitate meticulous strategic planning: donor identification engagement strategy messaging and communication event planning and metrics for measuring success. First identifying potential donors involves understanding who will support the cause based on shared values and interests. Next developing an engagement strategy that includes personalized communication and interaction can help maintain donor interest and commitment. Effective messaging is crucial; it must resonate with potential donors and clearly articulate the impact of their contribution. Planning fundraising events requires meticulous attention to detail ensuring they provide value to attendees and effectively showcase the cause. Finally establishing metrics for success is essential for tracking progress and making necessary adjustments to the fundraising strategy. Each of these elements must be carefully planned and executed to build and sustain donor relationships effectively ultimately supporting the broader goals of the initiative. As Weinstein (2002) emphasizes strategically managing these aspects is vital to achieving successful fundraising outcomes (Weinstein 2002).\n\n\n\n\n\n----------", "title": "GW DQ7.docx", "tether_id": null}, "status": "finished_successfully", "end_turn": null, "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"command": "context_stuff", "is_visually_hidden_from_conversation": true, "message_type": null, "model_slug": "gpt-4o", "default_model_slug": "gpt-4o", "parent_id": "aaa2542c-a73b-4092-b983-92ef0d2c4e88", "request_id": "898a26fd9b914bde-MXP", "timestamp_": "absolute"}, "recipient": "all", "channel": null}, "parent": "aaa2542c-a73b-4092-b983-92ef0d2c4e88", "children": ["534aeef0-b320-4379-a48e-2755bd31ca8e"]}, "534aeef0-b320-4379-a48e-2755bd31ca8e": {"id": "534aeef0-b320-4379-a48e-2755bd31ca8e", "message": {"id": "534aeef0-b320-4379-a48e-2755bd31ca8e", "author": {"role": "tool", "name": "myfiles_browser", "metadata": {}}, "create_time":

Describe your process for developing your theory of change.\n\nMy academic background in project management and my inherent analytical nature drive me to formulate a theory of change that follows a systematic and gradual process. This method ensures that my program's activities effectively contribute to the desired long-term outcomes.\n\nThe process commences with clearly articulating the long-term systemic change I aim to achieve. A theory of change is a purposeful model of how an initiative\u2014such as a policy a strategy a program or a project\u2014contributes through a chain of early and intermediate outcomes to the intended result (Serrat 2017). For instance if my program targets the enhancement of community health the desired impact might be described as "a healthier more resilient community" (Anderson n.d.).\n\nOutcomes represent the changes that need to occur to realize this impact and are categorized into short-term medium-term and long-term outcomes. These changes should be realistically influenceable and measurable over time (Hayes et al. 2011). For instance if the impact goal is community health an outcome might be "increased access to preventative healthcare services."\n\nOutputs denote the direct results of the program's activities and are indispensable in achieving the outcomes. Outputs are often quantifiable such as the number of people trained or the number of health check-ups conducted. In the context of a primary care practice-based research network (PBRN) outputs might include "number of community health workshops conducted" or "number of patients screened for chronic diseases" (Hayes et al. 2011).\n\nActivities represent the specific actions that the program will undertake to produce the outputs. Working backward from the outcomes is beneficial to identifying the necessary activities (Anderson n.d.). For instance to achieve increased access to healthcare the activities might include "organizing mobile health clinics" or "providing training for community health workers."\n\nInputs are the resources required to carry out these activities encompassing funding personnel training materials and facilities. It is imperative to identify all necessary inputs to ensure the successful implementation of activities. Inputs should be linked to the activities they support ensuring efficient and effective resource utilization (SoPact 2020).\n\nEngaging stakeholders throughout the process is paramount. This includes involving those who will benefit from the program and those who will implement it. Emphasizing the importance of partnerships and community involvement ensures that the program addresses local needs and leverages existing strengths.\n\nA theory of change should be a living document that evolves based on feedback and changing circumstances. Regularly revisiting and revising the theory of change is essential to reflect new insights and ensure continued alignment with goals. This approach underscores the need for ongoing evaluation to refine and improve the theory of change (Research to Action 2015).\nFollowing these steps and continuously engaging with stakeholders can provide a clear and actionable roadmap for achieving the program\u2019s long-term goals.\n----------\n\nAnderson A. As highlighted by Nigel Harris CEO of the Mater Foundation the first essential element is the longevity of relationships. Harris emphasizes that fundraising must transcend transactional interactions to nurture relationships that enhance donor retention and ongoing support ensuring long-term organizational stability (Efrat & Harris 2017).\nThe second essential element is a clear and compelling case statement. This foundational document articulates the organization's mission goals and how donor contributions impact these objectives. A robust case statement is crucial as it aligns fundraising efforts with the organization's strategic goals ensuring that both potential and current supporters clearly understand their contributions' significance (Hartford Foundation 2011).\nBoth elements are integral to building a fundraising approach where donors feel deeply connected to the cause fostering sustained engagement and support.\n\nPart B: What are the two main differences between fundraising and sustainable fundraising. Support your answer with specific examples.\nThe primary distinction between fundraising and sustainable fundraising is rooted in their strategic focus and the depth of relationships with donors. Traditional fundraising often targets immediate financial gains which can lead to a transactional approach where the engagement with donors ends once the funds are secured. For example one-off campaigns or events might successfully meet financial targets but do not ensure continued donor involvement potentially leading to a lack of sustained support. This approach can result in significant donor attrition as there is little emphasis on building lasting relationships with contributors (Weinstein 2002).\nThe concept of sustainable fundraising centers on cultivating long-term relationships and prioritizing donor retention as key strategies. This approach is based on the idea that maintaining current donors is more cost-effective and valuable than constantly pursuing new ones. Nigel Harris CEO of the Mater Foundation underscores the importance of taking a long-term view of fundraising focusing on nurturing meaningful connections rather than solely aiming for short-term financial gains (Efrat & Harris 2017). Consequently sustainable fundraising entails ongoing communication and engagement strategies to keep donors informed and involved nurturing a sense of loyalty and deeper commitment to the organization (Waters 2009).\nMoreover sustainable fundraising employs a strategic proactive approach that integrates a diverse range of fundraising activities specifically tailored to different donor segments. This is exemplified in the Benetton model which employs a systematic engagement process to maintain donor interest and support over time. The model emphasizes continuous donor engagement through regular updates and involvement in the organization's activities fostering a sense of partnership and investment in the long-term success of the organization (Benevon 2015).\nThus sustainable fundraising is not just about collecting funds but about building a community of engaged supporters who are committed to the organization's long-term mission and goals. This strategic shift not only enhances the stability of fundraising income but also deepens the organization's impact on its community and beyond.\n\nPart C: Review the 2020 Nonprofit Leadership Impact Study. Based on the findings what information did you find surprising relevant to you and your organization and helpful (please capture all three)?\nSurprising: The emphasis on technology and innovation within strategic planning as highlighted in the 2020 Nonprofit Leadership Impact Study was unexpected. This focus reflects a significant shift in the nonprofit sector towards digital transformation emphasizing the critical role technology plays in enhancing organizational reach and operational efficiency. For a concept like the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) which is currently in the ideational phase integrating technology from the outset is crucial to future-proof the organization (Te 2020).\nRelevant: The study's focus on leadership development and succession planning is highly pertinent. As GHIF is still in the conceptual stage this insight underscores the importance of establishing strong leadership structures early. This strategic focus ensures that when GHIF transitions from concept to reality it will have a robust framework in place to support sustainable growth and adapt to evolving challenges (Te 2020).\nHelpful: Insights on effective communication and donor transparency are particularly valuable. For GHIF these principles will be fundamental to establishing trust and building long-term relationships with future donors and stakeholders. The study highlights the necessity of maintaining open and transparent communication which will be vital as GHIF moves towards actualization ensuring that stakeholder engagement is at the core of its operations (Te 2020).\nThese findings from the study not only provide a theoretical foundation for GHIF but also outline essential strategies for operationalizing such concepts in a real-world nonprofit context. They offer a roadmap for developing GHIF into an organization capable of achieving its mission effectively and sustainably.\n\n----------\nBenevon (Director). (2015 January 10). We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management:\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions:\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates that collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries according to local health reports. Studies have shown cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to significantly enhance community health and well-being (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\n\n\n\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for staff\t\nQ2 2025\t\nRegulatory hurdles securing partner cooperation\n\t\nLaunch Wellness Travel Packages\t\nDesign packages negotiate with travel agencies\t\nQ3 2025\t\nLogistics coordination ensuring accessibility and inclusion\n\t\nRollout Educational Programs\t\nDevelop curricula and integrate into schools\t\nQ4 2025\t\nAdaptation to local educational standards funding\n\t\nPublic Workshops and Seminars\t\nPlan and implement workshops and lifelong learning seminars\t\nQ1 2026\t\nCommunity engagement sustaining interest over time\n\n\nReferences\nCunningham W. theory of change should clearly articulate how your work will contribute to the long-term outcomes you have set forth for your program. Describe your process for developing your theory of change.\n\nMy academic background in project management and my inherent analytical nature drive me to formulate a theory of change that follows a systematic and gradual process. This method ensures that my program's activities effectively contribute to the desired long-term outcomes.\n\nThe process commences with clearly articulating the long-term systemic change I aim to achieve. A theory of change is a purposeful model of how an initiative\u2014such as a policy a strategy a program or a project\u2014contributes through a chain of early and intermediate outcomes to the intended result (Serrat 2017). For instance if my program targets the enhancement of community health the desired impact might be described as "a healthier more resilient community" (Anderson n.d.).\n\nOutcomes represent the changes that need to occur to realize this impact and are categorized into short-term medium-term and long-term outcomes. These changes should be realistically influenceable and measurable over time (Hayes et al. 2011). For instance if the impact goal is community health an outcome might be "increased access to preventative healthcare services."\n\nOutputs denote the direct results of the program's activities and are indispensable in achieving the outcomes. Outputs are often quantifiable such as the number of people trained or the number of health check-ups conducted. In the context of a primary care practice-based research network (PBRN) outputs might include "number of community health workshops conducted" or "number of patients screened for chronic diseases" (Hayes et al. 2011).\n\nActivities represent the specific actions that the program will undertake to produce the outputs. Working backward from the outcomes is beneficial to identifying the necessary activities (Anderson n.d.). For instance to achieve increased access to healthcare the activities might include "organizing mobile health clinics" or "providing training for community health workers."\n\nInputs are the resources required to carry out these activities encompassing funding personnel training materials and facilities. It is imperative to identify all necessary inputs to ensure the successful implementation of activities. Inputs should be linked to the activities they support ensuring efficient and effective resource utilization (SoPact 2020).\n\nEngaging stakeholders throughout the process is paramount. This includes involving those who will benefit from the program and those who will implement it. Emphasizing the importance of partnerships and community involvement ensures that the program addresses local needs and leverages existing strengths.\n\nA theory of change should be a living document that evolves based on feedback and changing circumstances. Regularly revisiting and revising the theory of change is essential to reflect new insights and ensure continued alignment with goals. This approach underscores the need for ongoing evaluation to refine and improve the theory of change (Research to Action 2015).\nFollowing these steps and continuously engaging with stakeholders can provide a clear and actionable roadmap for achieving the program\u2019s long-term goals.\n----------\n\n\nAnderson A. As highlighted by Nigel Harris CEO of the Mater Foundation the first essential element is the longevity of relationships. Harris emphasizes that fundraising must transcend transactional interactions to nurture relationships that enhance donor retention and ongoing support ensuring long-term organizational stability (Efrat & Harris 2017).\nThe second essential element is a clear and compelling case statement. This foundational document articulates the organization's mission goals and how donor contributions impact these objectives. A robust case statement is crucial as it aligns fundraising efforts with the organization's strategic goals ensuring that both potential and current supporters clearly understand their contributions' significance (Hartford Foundation 2011).\nBoth elements are integral to building a fundraising approach where donors feel deeply connected to the cause fostering sustained engagement and support.\n\nPart B: What are the two main differences between fundraising and sustainable fundraising. Support your answer with specific examples.\nThe primary distinction between fundraising and sustainable fundraising is rooted in their strategic focus and the depth of relationships with donors. Traditional fundraising often targets immediate financial gains which can lead to a transactional approach where the engagement with donors ends once the funds are secured. For example one-off campaigns or events might successfully meet financial targets but do not ensure continued donor involvement potentially leading to a lack of sustained support. This approach can result in significant donor attrition as there is little emphasis on building lasting relationships with contributors (Weinstein 2002).\nThe concept of sustainable fundraising centers on cultivating long-term relationships and prioritizing donor retention as key strategies. This approach is based on the idea that maintaining current donors is more cost-effective and valuable than constantly pursuing new ones. Nigel Harris CEO of the Mater Foundation underscores the importance of taking a long-term view of fundraising focusing on nurturing meaningful connections rather than solely aiming for short-term financial gains (Efrat & Harris 2017). Consequently sustainable fundraising entails ongoing communication and engagement strategies to keep donors informed and involved nurturing a sense of loyalty and deeper commitment to the organization (Waters 2009).\nMoreover sustainable fundraising employs a strategic proactive approach that integrates a diverse range of fundraising activities specifically tailored to different donor segments. This is exemplified in the Benetton model which employs a systematic engagement process to maintain donor interest and support over time. The model emphasizes continuous donor engagement through regular updates and involvement in the organization's activities fostering a sense of partnership and investment in the long-term success of the organization (Benevon 2015).\nThus sustainable fundraising is not just about collecting funds but about building a community of engaged supporters who are committed to the organization's long-term mission and goals. This strategic shift not only enhances the stability of fundraising income but also deepens the organization's impact on its community and beyond.\n\nPart C: Review the 2020 Nonprofit Leadership Impact Study. Based on the findings what information did you find surprising relevant to you and your organization and helpful (please capture all three)?\nSurprising: The emphasis on technology and innovation within strategic planning as highlighted in the 2020 Nonprofit Leadership Impact Study was unexpected. This focus reflects a significant shift in the nonprofit sector towards digital transformation emphasizing the critical role technology plays in enhancing organizational reach and operational efficiency. For a concept like the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) which is currently in the ideational phase integrating technology from the outset is crucial to future-proof the organization (Te 2020).\nRelevant: The study's focus on leadership development and succession planning is highly pertinent. As GHIF is still in the conceptual stage this insight underscores the importance of establishing strong leadership structures early. This strategic focus ensures that when GHIF transitions from concept to reality it will have a robust framework in place to support sustainable growth and adapt to evolving challenges (Te 2020).\nHelpful: Insights on effective communication and donor transparency are particularly valuable. For GHIF these principles will be fundamental to establishing trust and building long-term relationships with future donors and stakeholders. The study highlights the necessity of maintaining open and transparent communication which will be vital as GHIF moves towards actualization ensuring that stakeholder engagement is at the core of its operations (Te 2020).\nThese findings from the study not only provide a theoretical foundation for GHIF but also outline essential strategies for operationalizing such concepts in a real-world nonprofit context. They offer a roadmap for developing GHIF into an organization capable of achieving its mission effectively and sustainably.\n\n----------\nBenevon (Director). (2015 January 10). Initiative Foundation stands out with its unique approach. We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management:\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions:\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates that collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries according to local health reports. Studies have shown cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to significantly enhance community health and well-being (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health

revising the theory of change is essential to reflect new insights and ensure continued alignment with goals. This approach underscores the need for ongoing evaluation to refine and improve the theory of change (Research to Action 2015).\nFollowing these steps and continuously engaging with stakeholders can provide a clear and actionable roadmap for achieving the program\u2019s long-term goals.\n----------\n\n\nAnderson A. As highlighted by Nigel Harris CEO of the Mater Foundation the first essential element is the longevity of relationships. Harris emphasizes that fundraising must transcend transactional interactions to nurture relationships that enhance donor retention and ongoing support ensuring long-term organizational stability (Efrat & Harris 2017).\nThe second essential element is a clear and compelling case statement. This foundational document articulates the organization's mission goals and how donor contributions impact these objectives. A robust case statement is crucial as it aligns fundraising efforts with the organization's strategic goals ensuring that both potential and current supporters clearly understand their contributions' significance (Hartford Foundation 2011).\nBoth elements are integral to building a fundraising approach where donors feel deeply connected to the cause fostering sustained engagement and support.\n\nPart B: What are the two main differences between fundraising and sustainable fundraising. Support your answer with specific examples.\nThe primary distinction between fundraising and sustainable fundraising is rooted in their strategic focus and the depth of relationships with donors. Traditional fundraising often targets immediate financial gains which can lead to a transactional approach where the engagement with donors ends once the funds are secured. For example one-off campaigns or events might successfully meet financial targets but do not ensure continued donor involvement potentially leading to a lack of sustained support. This approach can result in significant donor attrition as there is little emphasis on building lasting relationships with contributors (Weinstein 2002).\nThe concept of sustainable fundraising centers on cultivating long-term relationships and prioritizing donor retention as key strategies. This approach is based on the idea that maintaining current donors is more cost-effective and valuable than constantly pursuing new ones. Nigel Harris CEO of the Mater Foundation underscores the importance of taking a long-term view of fundraising focusing on nurturing meaningful connections rather than solely aiming for short-term financial gains (Efrat & Harris 2017). Consequently sustainable fundraising entails ongoing communication and engagement strategies to keep donors informed and involved nurturing a sense of loyalty and deeper commitment to the organization (Waters 2009).\nMoreover sustainable fundraising employs a strategic proactive approach that integrates a diverse range of fundraising activities specifically tailored to different donor segments. This is exemplified in the Benetton model which employs a systematic engagement process to maintain donor interest and support over time. The model emphasizes continuous donor engagement through regular updates and involvement in the organization's activities fostering a sense of partnership and investment in the long-term success of the organization (Benevon 2015).\nThus sustainable fundraising is not just about collecting funds but about building a community of engaged supporters who are committed to the organization's long-term mission and goals. This strategic shift not only enhances the stability of fundraising income but also deepens the organization's impact on its community and beyond.\n\nPart C: Review the 2020 Nonprofit Leadership Impact Study. Based on the findings what information did you find surprising relevant to you and your organization and helpful (please capture all three)?\nSurprising: The emphasis on technology and innovation within strategic planning as highlighted in the 2020 Nonprofit Leadership Impact Study was unexpected. This focus reflects a significant shift in the nonprofit sector towards digital transformation emphasizing the critical role technology plays in enhancing organizational reach and operational efficiency. For a concept like the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) which is currently in the ideational phase integrating technology from the outset is crucial to future-proof the organization (Te 2020).\nRelevant: The study's focus on leadership development and succession planning is highly pertinent. As GHIF is still in the conceptual stage this insight underscores the importance of establishing strong leadership structures early. This strategic focus ensures that when GHIF transitions from concept to reality it will have a robust framework in place to support sustainable growth and adapt to evolving challenges (Te 2020).\nHelpful: Insights on effective communication and donor transparency are particularly valuable. For GHIF these principles will be fundamental to establishing trust and building long-term relationships with future donors and stakeholders. The study highlights the necessity of maintaining open and transparent communication which will be vital as GHIF moves towards actualization ensuring that stakeholder engagement is at the core of its operations (Te 2020).\nThese findings from the study not only provide a theoretical foundation for GHIF but also outline essential strategies for operationalizing such concepts in a real-world nonprofit context. They offer a roadmap for developing GHIF into an organization capable of achieving its mission effectively and sustainably.\n\n----------\nBenevon (Director). (2015 January 10). We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management:\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions:\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates that collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries according to local health reports. Studies have shown cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to significantly enhance community health and well-being (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\n\n\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for staff\t\nQ2 2025\t\nRegulatory hurdles securing partner cooperation\n\t\nLaunch Wellness Travel Packages\t\nDesign packages negotiate with travel agencies\t\nQ3 2025\t\nLogistics coordination ensuring accessibility and inclusion\n\t\nRollout Educational Programs\t\nDevelop curricula and integrate into schools\t\nQ4 2025\t\nAdaptation to local educational standards funding\n\t\nPublic Workshops and Seminars\t\nPlan and implement workshops and lifelong learning seminars\t\nQ1 2026\t\nCommunity engagement sustaining interest over time\n\n\nReferences\nCunningham W. We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe

We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management:\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions:\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates that collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries according to local health reports. Studies have shown cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to significantly enhance community health and well-being (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\n\n\n\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for staff\t\nQ2 2025\t\nRegulatory hurdles securing partner cooperation\n\t\nLaunch Wellness Travel Packages\t\nDesign packages negotiate with travel agencies\t\nQ3 2025\t\nLogistics coordination ensuring accessibility and inclusion\n\t\nRollout Educational Programs\t\nDevelop curricula and integrate into schools\t\nQ4 2025\t\nAdaptation to local educational standards funding\n\t\nPublic Workshops and Seminars\t\nPlan and implement workshops and lifelong learning seminars\t\nQ1 2026\t\nCommunity engagement sustaining interest over time\n\n\nReferences\nCunningham W. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\n\n\n\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for staff\t\nQ2 2025\t\nRegulatory hurdles securing partner cooperation\n\t\nLaunch Wellness Travel Packages\t\nDesign packages negotiate with travel agencies\t\nQ3 2025\t\nLogistics coordination ensuring accessibility and inclusion\n\t\nRollout Educational Programs\t\nDevelop curricula and integrate into schools\t\nQ4 2025\t\nAdaptation to local educational standards funding\n\t\nPublic Workshops and Seminars\t\nPlan and implement workshops and lifelong learning seminars\t\nQ1 2026\t\nCommunity engagement sustaining interest over time\n\n\nReferences\nCunningham W. We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's

order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable

objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge

impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and

organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management:\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions:\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates that collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries according to local health reports. Studies have shown cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to significantly enhance community health and well-being (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\n\n\n\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for staff\t\nQ2 2025\t\nRegulatory hurdles securing partner cooperation\n\t\nLaunch Wellness Travel Packages\t\nDesign packages negotiate with travel agencies\t\nQ3 2025\t\nLogistics coordination ensuring accessibility and inclusion\n\t\nRollout Educational Programs\t\nDevelop curricula and integrate into schools\t\nQ4 2025\t\nAdaptation to local educational standards funding\n\t\nPublic Workshops and Seminars\t\nPlan and implement workshops and lifelong learning seminars\t\nQ1 2026\t\nCommunity engagement sustaining interest over time\n\n\nReferences\nCunningham W. We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management:\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions:\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates that collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries according to local health reports. Studies have shown cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to significantly enhance community health and well-being (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\n\n\n\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for staff\t\nQ2 2025\t\nRegulatory hurdles securing partner cooperation\n\t\nLaunch Wellness Travel Packages\t\nDesign packages negotiate with travel agencies\t\nQ3 2025\t\nLogistics coordination ensuring accessibility and inclusion\n\t\nRollout Educational Programs\t\nDevelop curricula and integrate into schools\t\nQ4 2025\t\nAdaptation to local educational standards funding\n\t\nPublic Workshops and Seminars\t\nPlan and implement workshops and lifelong learning seminars\t\nQ1 2026\t\nCommunity engagement sustaining interest over time\n\n\nReferences\nCunningham W. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\n\n\n\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for staff\t\nQ2 2025\t\nRegulatory hurdles securing partner cooperation\n\t\nLaunch Wellness Travel Packages\t\nDesign packages negotiate with travel agencies\t\nQ3 2025\t\nLogistics coordination ensuring accessibility and inclusion\n\t\nRollout Educational Programs\t\nDevelop curricula and integrate into schools\t\nQ4 2025\t\nAdaptation to local educational standards funding\n\t\nPublic Workshops and Seminars\t\nPlan and implement workshops and lifelong learning seminars\t\nQ1 2026\t\nCommunity engagement sustaining interest over time\n\n\nReferences\nCunningham W. Lopez\nMay 19 2024\nIntroduction\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation stands out with its unique approach. We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management:\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions:\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates that collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries according to local health reports. Studies have shown cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to significantly enhance community health and well-being (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health

objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge

access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. out with its unique approach. We believe that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. These ideas reflect our vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony.\nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the necessary skills to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\n\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to key well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we aim to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will not only benefit the communities we serve but also provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are not just beneficial; they are crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\n\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. By the end of the first six months we will secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers. These collaborations will focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health which are crucial for improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have shown positive impacts on well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and

Management Capability:\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise:\nThe founding team of GHIF will include highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems:\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management:\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions:\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates that collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries according to local health reports. Studies have shown cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to significantly enhance community health and well-being (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that simplifies the process for individuals to access the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\n\n\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for staff\t\nQ2 2025\t\nRegulatory hurdles securing partner cooperation\n\t\nLaunch Wellness Travel Packages\t\nDesign packages negotiate with travel agencies\t\nQ3 2025\t\nLogistics coordination ensuring accessibility and inclusion\n\t\nRollout Educational Programs\t\nDevelop curricula and integrate into schools\t\nQ4 2025\t\nAdaptation to local educational standards funding\n\t\nPublic Workshops and Seminars\t\nPlan and implement workshops and lifelong learning seminars\t\nQ1 2026\t\nCommunity engagement sustaining interest over time\n\n\nReferences\nCunningham W. Our mission is based on the belief that individual happiness is a societal asset fostering a healthier more resilient and interconnected world. GHIF focuses on healthcare access educational opportunities and wellness travel experiences. By partnering with local healthcare providers academic institutions and travel agencies GHIF aims to deliver services that address immediate and long-term needs.\nThe purpose of GHIF is to improve overall well-being and happiness globally. We aim to increase access to well-being services in the United States and Italy and establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international organizations. Our objectives include launching educational programs reaching over 5000 individuals securing healthcare partnerships with at least five major providers and developing a wellness travel model ready for implementation within 18 months.\nOur Theory of Change centers on the idea that enhanced access to healthcare education and cultural experiences leads to a healthier more connected society. By organizing mobile health clinics providing mental health counseling and conducting preventive health workshops we aim to improve health outcomes. Expanding educational opportunities through after-school programs scholarships and vocational training will improve psychological well-being. The wellness travel model will integrate health-promoting activities with cultural experiences to reduce stress and enhance mental health.\nEvaluation is crucial to our strategy. We use a mixed-methods approach combining formative and summative assessments to ensure continuous improvement and measure program effectiveness. Data collection tools include surveys interviews focus groups and program monitoring data. \nWe are requesting a grant of $3000000 which covers healthcare services educational programs wellness travel experiences administrative costs and evaluation. This budget ensures effective resource allocation for immediate and long-term impact. By leveraging donor support and strategic partnerships GHIF aims to make a significant and sustainable impact on global well-being. Our approach emphasis on collaboration and commitment to community engagement ensure that our initiatives are culturally relevant and meet local needs fostering a happier healthier and more interconnected world.\nIntroduction\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation's mission vision and objectives are rooted in the idea that an individual's happiness is not just a personal achievement but a societal asset. A content person is a beacon of positivity capable of enriching their community. When we collectively strive for happiness we also invest in our well-being and foster a society free from the shackles of discontent. \nAs the renowned author John Donne (2010) famously proclaimed \u201cNo man is an island.\u201d This sentiment holds true in our pursuit of societal greatness. Achieving this requires unity and collaboration. However when an individual is grappling with internal conflicts such as mental health struggles physical ailments and a general decline in well-being overcoming these challenges alone becomes an insurmountable task. Wellness is not just a personal concern but a societal issue that impacts us all.\nIn addition to discussing wellness it is necessary also to address the role of education. If wellness is the foundation education is the next step where individuals acquire the skills needed to lead purposeful dignified and joyful lives. Nobody is inherently equipped with the knowledge to improve their surroundings; it must be learned. Therefore education holds equal significance in the pursuit of wellness. As one begins to grasp the world's order concepts like the principles of space and time the philosophies of Aristotle the mathematics of our universe and the evocative poetry of Yates one starts to perceive the world in a new nuanced way. Therefore to truly understand oneself it is sometimes necessary to first understand one's environment. Thus in parallel with well-being education holds great importance.\nAs individuals gain knowledge about the world around them they instinctively desire to explore it further engaging with it through the senses of touch taste and sight. Rather than solely studying Mozart and reading musical notations experiencing the music in person is essential. Therefore travel is an invaluable gateway to becoming a well-rounded individual capable of positively contributing to society.\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to creating a better world. By leveraging the support of donor investors the foundation aims to empower individuals to pursue their own happiness by providing necessary tools. Our efforts involve establishing partnerships with local government bodies and healthcare providers to ensure easy access to government services and healthcare and make travel accessible to all who desire it. These initiatives will lay the foundation for our long-term vision of a globally interconnected and joyful society.\nPurpose\nThe primary purpose of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is to enhance the overall well-being and happiness of individuals globally through increased access to essential life-enhancing services. The Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to providing the necessary tools for individuals to pursue their happiness. Our starting point is ensuring access to healthcare and mental health services as a fundamental human right and a crucial component in our efforts to build a better world. We also aim to utilize well-being travel cultural immersion and education resources to empower individuals to gain self-awareness understand others and collectively achieve holistic happiness.\nGoals\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation is committed to enhancing the global quality of life through two strategic goals.\nLong-term Goal: Increase Access to Key Well-being Services\nOur long-term goal is to significantly increase access to well-being services globally with our efforts first being localized in the United States and Italy. By doing so we strive to improve the quality of life and foster sustained happiness in diverse communities. This goal will benefit the communities we serve and provide donor-investors with the satisfaction of knowing that their support is making a tangible difference in people's lives. The impact of these programs will be measured by tracking the number of individuals accessing these services the improvement in health and education outcomes and overall satisfaction rates among participants reflecting the direct benefits of our initiatives.\nShort-term Goal: Establish and Strengthen Partnerships\nPartnerships are at the heart of our strategy. Our short-term goal is to establish and strengthen partnerships with local and international public and private organizations. These partnerships are beneficial and crucial for enhancing our capability to deliver critical services effectively and efficiently. By collaborating with organizations with established infrastructures and expertise in our target regions we can leverage their strengths to better serve the communities' needs. Formalizing at least five significant partnerships within the first six months will be vital to achieving this goal.\nBoth goals complement existing efforts in the target communities rather than duplicate them ensuring that our interventions add value and create a measurable impact. Through these focused efforts the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation seeks to build a foundation for long-term social change that contributes to the well-being of individuals worldwide.\nObjectives\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) has set ambitious yet achievable objectives to ensure a broad and lasting impact on global well-being.\nEducational Expansion\nOur first objective focuses on education expansion. Within the first year GHIF plans to launch educational programs in at least two countries aiming to reach over 5000 individuals. These programs will be developed to address local educational gaps better equip youths with functional skills and promote holistic learning experiences. Evidence shows that educational programs can significantly enhance psychological well-being by increasing self-efficacy social support and overall life satisfaction (Ross & Van Willigen 1997). Moreover education has been linked to improved health outcomes and better mental health with increased years of education correlating with lower rates of depression and anxiety (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). The success of these programs will be measured by the number of programs successfully launched the total number of participants enrolled and participant feedback on program effectiveness.\nHealthcare Partnerships\nSimultaneously GHIF aims to establish healthcare partnerships to enhance access to medical and mental health services. We plan to secure partnerships with at least five major healthcare providers by the end of the first six months. These collaborations focus on providing comprehensive health services emphasizing preventive care and mental health vital to improving individual well-being. Studies have shown that partnerships between educational institutions and healthcare providers can significantly improve health outcomes particularly in preventive care and mental health services (Ross & Wu 1995). The effectiveness of these partnerships will be assessed through the number of agreements signed the range of services provided and feedback from service users regarding the accessibility and quality of care.\nWellness Travel Model\nLastly our third objective is to develop a wellness travel model which will be designed developed and ready for implementation within the first eighteen months. This model will provide frameworks for wellness-oriented travel experiences promoting mental and physical health benefits through carefully crafted travel packages. Wellness programs embedded in educational and travel contexts have positively impacted well-being reducing stress and improving mental health (Young et al. 2020). The model\u2019s success will be evaluated based on participant satisfaction measured through surveys and the repeat engagement rate indicating the model's appeal and effectiveness in enhancing participants' well-being.\nOrganizational Capacity\nFoundation Structure and Management Capability\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is designed to be a robust organization capable of managing large-scale projects and substantial grants. At its inception GHIF will establish a governance structure with a board of directors comprising education healthcare mental health and non-profit management experts. This board will provide strategic oversight and ensure all activities align with our mission and objectives.\nFounding Team Expertise\nThe founding team of GHIF includes highly qualified professionals selected for their extensive experience in project management international development healthcare and educational programming. Our recruitment strategy focuses on identifying individuals with a proven track record such as a Project Director with significant experience in managing and scaling community health programs an Education Specialist renowned for developing effective curricula in diverse cultural settings and a Mental Health Advocate with a strong background in leading global mental wellness initiatives. This planned assembly of expertise ensures a comprehensive and skilled approach to achieving the foundation\u2019s objectives.\nProject Management Systems\nGHIF will implement rigorous project management methodologies to oversee all foundation activities. We will utilize established frameworks such as the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) guidelines to plan execute monitor and close projects. Additionally GHIF will adopt modern project management tools for real-time tracking and reporting facilitating transparent and efficient management of the grant funds.\nPreparatory Actions for Grant Management\nPrior to receiving the grant GHIF will:\nFormulate detailed project plans including timelines budgets and resource allocation.\nEstablish financial management policies tailored to ensure accountability and prudent use of funds.\nInitiate discussions with potential partners and stakeholders to build a support network for immediate project launch upon funding.\nDemonstrating Capacity through Strategic Intentions\nWhile GHIF is a nascent organization our strategic planning reflects a clear and actionable roadmap for immediate impact upon funding. The foundation\u2019s goals are backed by a commitment to leverage the diverse skills of its team and the strategic insights of its board to establish a high-performing organization. GHIF's initial actions and detailed project preparations demonstrate our readiness and capability to effectively manage and utilize the grant to achieve significant social impact.\nCross-Sector Collaboration \nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to developing localized high-impact programs that serve as models for global implementation. To achieve this GHIF emphasizes cross-sector collaboration mainly focusing on strategic partnerships in Italy and the United States. These collaborations are designed to leverage regional strengths and address specific local needs ensuring the adaptability and effectiveness of our well-being services.\nLocalized Educational Partnerships\nGHIF will collaborate with leading educational institutions in Italy and the United States to integrate well-being practices into educational curricula. This initiative will focus on regions with significant disparities in educational outcomes providing targeted interventions that are culturally and contextually relevant. Research indicates collaborative learning environments and educational partnerships can significantly enhance student outcomes and well-being (Kilgo et al. 2015). Success in these partnerships will be evaluated based on academic improvements student well-being metrics and the scalability of the programs to other regions.\nHealthcare Alliances\nGHIF plans to partner with healthcare organizations in Italy and the United States to increase access to quality health services. These partnerships will focus on integrating mental health services with primary care a critical need in both countries as local health reports indicate. Indeed studies have shown that cross-sector healthcare collaborations can improve health outcomes particularly when mental health services are integrated with primary care (Randall et al. 2023). By working with local health providers and community organizations these initiatives aim to create sustainable health improvement models suitable for global replication.\nPublic-Private Partnerships\nGHIF will seek partnerships with local government bodies and private sectors in Italy and the United States to support infrastructure development vital to program delivery. These partnerships will help facilitate the creation of community wellness centers which will serve as hubs for education healthcare and community activities. Effective public-private partnerships have been shown to enhance community health and well-being significantly (Ovseiko et al. 2014). The effectiveness of these centers will be measured through community engagement rates and the overall improvement in community health and educational outcomes.\nCommunity Engagement\nIntegral to our strategy is the direct involvement of local communities in Italy and the United States in the planning and implementation phases. GHIF believes that community input is essential to tailoring programs that genuinely reflect and meet local needs. Feedback mechanisms and community advisory boards will be established to monitor the programs\u2019 impacts and guide iterative improvements as evidence proves that community involvement is crucial for the success and sustainability of public health programs (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nProgram Plan\nIntroduction to Program Strategy\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is committed to addressing critical needs in communities across the United States and Italy. We implement multifaceted strategies that enhance individual well-being and community health specifically designed to complement rather than duplicate existing services. Our comprehensive approach leverages local strengths and targets specific challenges through innovative and sustainable solutions.\n\nIntegration with Government and Healthcare Services\nOur initiative targets significant gaps in access to healthcare and government support services. These gaps have been identified through extensive community outreach and stakeholder engagement underscoring a pressing need for improved service accessibility and quality. To address these challenges GHIF plans to forge strategic alliances with local health departments and social service agencies creating a referral network that facilitates individuals' access to the services they need. This network aims to increase the efficiency and responsiveness of health and social care systems.\nPartnership development is crucial for the success of our healthcare integration strategy. By collaborating with local health authorities and service providers we aim to establish robust partnerships that facilitate streamlined access to healthcare and support services. These partnerships will be foundational in building a comprehensive referral system that enhances service delivery and meets the specific needs of the communities we serve.\nIn addition to building partnerships GHIF will engage in advocacy and policy work to enhance healthcare delivery. We will work closely with policymakers to advocate for regulations and policies prioritizing the health and well-being of underrepresented communities. Our focus on advocacy aims to influence policy changes that improve healthcare accessibility and address systemic barriers in service delivery.\nTraining community health workers is another critical component of our strategy. GHIF will implement comprehensive training programs designed to enhance the capabilities of health workers in assisting individuals effectively. These programs will focus on developing empathy technical skills and a deep understanding of the healthcare system. This will ensure that community health workers are well-equipped to support individuals in navigating health and social services.\nWellness Travel Model\nGHIF recognizes the therapeutic potential of travel in promoting mental and physical well-being. To harness this potential we are developing a Wellness Travel Model that integrates health benefits with cultural and educational experiences. This innovative approach to wellness extends beyond traditional health settings and includes travel packages that feature guided meditations wellness workshops and cultural tours. Each package is designed in collaboration with travel experts and cultural institutions to ensure that it offers genuine health benefits and facilitates cultural appreciation.\nCommunity-based involvement is integral to the design and execution of our Wellness Travel Model. We engage local communities in developing travel experiences to ensure they are culturally respectful and enriching for visitors and hosts. This engagement helps create authentic travel experiences sensitive to the host communities' cultural dynamics and provides meaningful interactions that benefit all participants.\nHolistic Educational Access\nGHIF is also dedicated to transforming educational access by integrating a curriculum that includes advanced technology training and comprehensive arts education. This holistic approach aims to bridge the gap in technological and creative skills preparing individuals for the demands of the modern workforce and personal development. Our curriculum includes coding robotics visual arts and music training and is designed to be integrated into school systems and community learning centers.\nGHIF will establish ongoing learning opportunities through workshops and seminars open to all age groups to complement our formal education initiatives. These initiatives focus on continuous skill development and personal growth promoting lifelong learning and adaptability. By offering workshops and seminars that cover a range of skills and artistic disciplines we aim to foster an environment of continuous learning and creative exploration.\nTimeline and Evaluation\nThe timeline for these initiatives is strategically set to ensure a phased implementation. By the end of the second quarter of 2025 GHIF will establish the initial partnerships necessary for the referral systems and develop training programs for community health workers. Following the establishment of partnerships early in the same year the Wellness Travel Packages are expected to be launched by the third quarter of 2025. Educational program rollouts will begin in the fourth quarter of 2024 and be fully implemented across targeted regions by the second quarter of 2025.\nEach element of the program plan is designed to measure specific outcomes related to access satisfaction and educational attainment ensuring that GHIF's interventions create measurable and sustainable impacts in the communities served. This strategic planning demonstrates GHIF's capability to manage a large grant effectively and fulfill its mission of building a foundation for long-term social change that contributes significantly to global well-being.\n\nGHIF Project Timeline and Deliverables\n\t\nDeliverables\t\nActivities\t\nDue Date\t\nExpected Challenges\n\t\nSet up Referral Systems\t\nEstablish partnerships develop training for staff\t\nQ2 2025\t\nRegulatory hurdles securing partner cooperation\n\t\nLaunch Wellness Travel Packages\t\nDesign packages negotiate with

Evaluating these initiatives is critical to understanding their impact and continuously refining their effectiveness. GHIF\u2019s evaluation approach incorporates formative and summative assessments to ensure comprehensive feedback and learning throughout the project lifecycle (Serrat 2017).\nFormative and Summative Evaluation: Rationale\nGHIF employs a mixed-methods evaluation strategy combining both formative and summative evaluations. Formative evaluation is ongoing and focuses on process evaluation intended to improve program implementation in real-time by identifying and addressing operational issues as they arise. This approach is aligned with the foundation's adaptive management strategy allowing for continuous improvements based on systematic data collection and analysis (Hayes et al. 2011). Summative evaluation occurs at the end of the project cycle aiming to assess the outcomes and impact of the interventions. This will provide GHIF and its stakeholders with evidence of the program\u2019s effectiveness and insights into how the initiatives have contributed to the long-term goal of increased well-being and happiness. The rationale behind this dual approach is to ensure that while the program\u2019s processes are optimized for success their ultimate effectiveness in achieving the desired outcomes is also rigorously assessed (SoPact 2020).\nGuiding Evaluation Questions\nThe effectiveness of GHIF programs in increasing access to critical well-being services in targeted communities is critical to the foundation's mission. One of the guiding evaluation questions asks "How effectively do the GHIF programs increase access to key well-being services in targeted communities?" Measuring how effectively these programs enhance access involves assessing improvements in health outcomes increased usage of services and participant satisfaction. For example providing mental health services and preventive care through local partnerships can significantly reduce barriers to accessing these services thereby enhancing overall community well-being (Ross & Wu 1995). Successful implementation of these programs leads to a healthier population directly contributing to GHIF\u2019s overarching goal of fostering societal harmony and happiness. This focus on accessibility is essential as it ensures that the benefits of GHIF\u2019s initiatives reach the most vulnerable populations ultimately promoting equity and inclusivity in health and well-being.\nUnderstanding the measurable impacts of the educational programs on participants' psychological well-being and social support systems is another crucial aspect of the evaluation. The question "What are the measurable impacts of the educational programs on participants' psychological well-being and social support systems?" guides this analysis. Educational programs profoundly impact participants by improving self-efficacy and fostering a sense of community which can alleviate feelings of isolation and anxiety (Ross & Van Willigen 1997). The GHIF\u2019s educational initiatives aim to equip individuals with functional skills and holistic learning experiences thereby improving mental health outcomes and strengthening social support networks (Kondirolli & Sunder 2022). This enhanced psychological well-being supports the foundation's broader objective of achieving holistic happiness through education. It creates a ripple effect where educated individuals can contribute positively to their communities furthering societal well-being.\nAnother key evaluation question is evaluating the extent to which healthcare partnerships have enhanced access to medical and mental health services. Examining "To what extent have healthcare partnerships improved access to medical and mental health services?" is essential for understanding the impact of collaborative health efforts. Healthcare partnerships are crucial for improving access to these services by integrating mental health services with primary care and ensuring comprehensive healthcare delivery especially in underserved areas (Randall et al. 2023). The effectiveness of these partnerships in the GHIF\u2019s model can be measured by the range and quality of services provided and the level of accessibility experienced by community members. Successful healthcare partnerships support the foundation's goal of enhancing global quality of life through improved health outcomes and demonstrate the importance of collaborative approaches in addressing complex health issues. These partnerships ensure services are delivered efficiently and sustainably maximizing their impact on community health.\nEvaluating how participants perceive the quality and benefits of the wellness travel model is crucial in determining its success and potential for broader application. The guiding question "How do participants perceive the quality and benefits of the wellness travel model?" addresses this aspect. Positive feedback and high satisfaction levels can indicate these travel experiences' effectiveness in promoting mental and physical health (Young et al. 2020). GHIF\u2019s wellness travel initiatives are designed to provide therapeutic benefits and cultural enrichment fostering a profound sense of well-being and personal growth. This innovative approach aligns with GHIF\u2019s commitment to creating well-rounded individuals who can contribute positively to society. By incorporating participant feedback into the evaluation process GHIF ensures that its wellness travel programs remain relevant and responsive to the needs of its participants thereby enhancing their overall effectiveness.\nThese guiding evaluation questions inform GHIF\u2019s activities by emphasizing the importance of accessibility psychological well-being healthcare partnerships and participant feedback. Addressing these areas allows GHIF to refine its strategies enhance the effectiveness of its programs and better communicate its impact to stakeholders. This comprehensive evaluation approach ensures that GHIF\u2019s initiatives are effective in achieving their intended outcomes and continuously improved to meet the evolving needs of the communities they serve.\nData Collection Tools\nTo effectively gather data for formative and summative evaluations the Global Health Improvement Foundation (GHIF) will employ a comprehensive suite of data collection tools designed to capture quantitative and qualitative data providing a holistic view of program performance and impact. Surveys and questionnaires will be essential for collecting quantitative data on participant satisfaction outcome achievement and the overall impact of services provided. These instruments will be administered in paper-based and electronic formats utilizing platforms such as SurveyMonkey Google Forms and Qualtrics. These tools offer robust analytics features enabling real-time data visualization and reporting crucial for timely and informed decision-making (Dillman et al. 2014).\nIn addition to surveys interviews and focus groups will be conducted to gather qualitative data through structured interactions with participants stakeholders and program staff. These methods provide deeper insights into the experiences and effects of program activities. Semi-structured interviews and focus groups will be facilitated in person over the phone or via video conferencing platforms like Zoom and Microsoft Teams allowing for flexibility and broader participation. Trained interviewers will use standardized guides to ensure consistency while enabling in-depth exploration of specific topics. The qualitative data collected will be analyzed using software such as NVivo and ATLAS.ti which support the coding and thematic analysis of interview transcripts and focus group discussions thereby identifying patterns and trends within the qualitative data (Creswell & Poth 2018).\nRegular collection of program monitoring data will also play an integral role in informing both formative and summative evaluations. This data will be captured through attendance sheets registration logs and digital tracking systems and include the number of workshops held healthcare screenings conducted and participation rates in educational programs. GHIF will implement management information systems (MIS) such as Salesforce and DHIS2 to record and manage this data. These systems offer features like automated data entry and real-time updates enhancing data accuracy and accessibility. Integrating such technology ensures a seamless flow of information and supports comprehensive program monitoring (Wang & Strong 1996).\nGHIF will leverage cloud-based platforms and mobile applications that enable remote data entry and real-time synchronization to ensure seamless integration of various data collection tools. These technologies will allow field staff to enter data directly into the system using tablets or smartphones reducing the risk of data loss and errors associated with manual data entry. Moreover GHIF is committed to maintaining the highest data security and privacy standards. All data collection tools and systems will comply with relevant data protection regulations such as the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) and the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA). Measures will include encryption secure data storage and restricted access to sensitive information with regular audits and staff training ensuring ongoing compliance and the safeguarding of participant data (McCallister et al. 2010).\nBy employing diverse data collection tools and integrating advanced technology and software GHIF will gather comprehensive data to inform both formative and summative evaluations. This approach enables the foundation to assess and enhance its programs' effectiveness continually ultimately driving improved health outcomes and service delivery. The integration of qualitative and quantitative methodologies supported by state-of-the-art software ensures that GHIF's evaluation processes are both thorough and precise reflecting a commitment to excellence in program evaluation and improvement (Creswell & Creswell 2018).\nTheory of Change\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) is driven by a vision where individual happiness is the cornerstone of societal harmony. This vision recognizes that personal well-being is not merely an individual concern but a critical societal asset. Our Theory of Change articulates a systematic pathway to achieve this vision by enhancing access to healthcare education and cultural experiences. This comprehensive approach ensures that our initiatives contribute meaningfully to long-term societal well-being.\nThe foundation of GHIF's Theory of Change begins with identifying the desired long-term impact: a healthier more resilient and interconnected global society. To achieve this our model delineates a series of early and intermediate outcomes that are essential for realizing the ultimate goal. These outcomes include improved access to healthcare services increased educational attainment and enhanced cultural understanding through travel. Each of these outcomes is interconnected forming a pathway that underscores the holistic nature of our approach.\nHealthcare access is paramount to our strategy. By partnering with local healthcare providers and governments GHIF ensures that essential medical and mental health services are available to underserved communities. Specific activities include organizing mobile health clinics providing mental health counseling and conducting preventive health workshops. Studies have demonstrated that improved access to healthcare services leads to better health outcomes and increased longevity (Gu et al. 2009). Our initiatives therefore focus on preventive care and mental health services which are critical for building a healthy society. This strategic focus addresses immediate health needs and contributes to long-term societal well-being by reducing healthcare disparities. Measurement indicators include the number of individuals served health outcomes such as reduced incidence of chronic diseases and patient satisfaction levels.\nEducation is the second pillar of our Theory of Change. GHIF aims to expand educational opportunities by implementing programs that address local educational gaps and promote holistic learning experiences. Activities include setting up after-school programs providing scholarships for higher education and offering vocational training. Educational attainment has been shown to improve psychological well-being and enhance social support networks (Ross & Van Willigen 1997). Our educational programs are designed to equip individuals with the skills necessary for personal development and societal contribution. By fostering a culture of continuous learning GHIF ensures that individuals are prepared to navigate and contribute to a rapidly changing world. Progress will be measured by the number of students enrolled graduation rates and improvements in literacy and employment rates.\nThe third pillar of our Theory of Change is cultural immersion through travel. GHIF's wellness travel model integrates health-promoting activities with cultural experiences allowing participants to gain new perspectives and improve their mental and physical well-being. Specific initiatives include guided meditation retreats wellness workshops and cultural exchange programs. Research indicates that wellness programs embedded in travel experiences can significantly reduce stress and enhance mental health (Young et al. 2020). By facilitating these enriching experiences GHIF promotes a more connected and empathetic global community essential for fostering societal harmony. Success indicators include participant feedback on their mental well-being the number of travel experiences conducted and repeat engagement rates.\nGHIF's Theory of Change is a comprehensive framework integrating healthcare education and cultural experiences to enhance individual and societal well-being. GHIF sets the stage for long-term societal transformation by systematically addressing these areas. Our theory of change outlines the steps necessary to achieve our goals and provides a clear roadmap for measuring progress and making necessary adjustments. As such GHIF remains committed to creating a happier healthier and more interconnected world.\nLogic Model for GHIF Programs\nThe Global Health Improvement Foundation (GHIF) programs are underpinned by a detailed logic model encompassing several essential inputs and resources. Central to these inputs is the securement of funding through various channels including grants donations and in-kind support from corporate sponsors and individual donors. Such funding is crucial for covering operational costs program development and service delivery. Adequate funding ensures that resources are appropriately allocated to meet the needs of the target population as emphasized by Serrat (2017) who notes that sustained financial support is vital for the continuity and effectiveness of program activities.\nEqually important are the human resources that drive GHIF's programs. This team of trained professionals including program managers health professionals educators and support staff brings a wealth of expertise and commitment vital to successful program implementation and management. The quality and capability of these human resources directly influence the effectiveness of program activities. Frumkin (2005) underscores the critical role of skilled and dedicated personnel in achieving program goals and delivering high-quality services.\nFurthermore GHIF leverages strategic partnerships to enhance its capacity to deliver comprehensive services. Collaborations with healthcare providers educational institutions governmental agencies and community organizations are integral to the foundation's strategy. These partnerships enable GHIF to expand its reach and impact by leveraging external expertise and resources. Kilgo et al. (2015) highlight the importance of such strategic alliances in broadening the scope and effectiveness of educational and health programs.\nGHIF's detailed logic model integrates funding human resources and strategic partnerships to create a robust framework for program delivery. These components work synergistically to ensure that GHIF can effectively meet its objectives and make a significant impact on the health and well-being of the communities it serves. By securing adequate funding harnessing the expertise of dedicated professionals and forming strategic partnerships GHIF is well-positioned to deliver on its mission and drive meaningful change.\nThe activities undertaken by GHIF to achieve its goals are diverse and targeted. Health workshops focus on mental health preventative care and healthy lifestyles in various communities aiming to educate participants on essential health topics and promote behaviors that enhance well-being. According to Young et al. (2022) educational workshops can significantly improve mental health and overall quality of life. Educational programs emphasize personal development professional skills and wellness practices empowering individuals to improve their life circumstances and contribute positively to their communities (Ross & Van Willigen 1997). Organized wellness travel experiences integrate health-promoting activities with cultural immersion providing participants with opportunities to relax rejuvenate and gain new perspectives thereby enhancing their mental and physical well-being (Hayes et al. 2011). Community engagement initiatives involve events and forums that encourage feedback and active participation in program services which is crucial for tailoring services to local needs and ensuring sustainable impact (Mattessich & Rausch 2014).\nThe outputs of GHIF\u2019s programs are the immediate tangible results of its activities. The number of workshops held is a quantitative measure of GHIF's outreach efforts tracking the total sessions conducted in health education and wellness (Hayes et al. 2011). The number of participants served reflects the program's reach and engagement with the target population (Young et al. 2022). The quantity of educational materials distributed indicates the program\u2019s efforts to disseminate knowledge and resources (Ross & Van Willigen 1997). The number of health assessments performed measures the direct health services delivered to participants (Cunningham et al. 1998). The number of collaborative initiatives with other organizations and stakeholders highlights GHIF's efforts to build and maintain strategic partnerships (Kilgo et al. 2015).\nThe outcomes represent the changes or benefits resulting from the program activities. Improved health metrics are evidenced by reduced health issues and overall wellness among participants as measured by pre- and post-assessment data. Improved health metrics indicate the effectiveness of health workshops and services provided by GHIF (Gu et al. 2009). Increased knowledge tracked through surveys and tests enhances participants' understanding of health and wellness topics empowering individuals to make informed decisions about their well-being (Ross & Wu 1995). Enhanced community well-being measured by community surveys assessing changes in local health and educational outcomes indicates the broader impact of GHIF's programs (Randall et al. 2023). Strengthened partnerships evaluated through regular reviews and stakeholder feedback are essential for sustaining program activities and expanding their reach (Ovseiko et al. 2014).\nThe long-term impacts of GHIF\u2019s programs reflect the foundation's overarching mission. Societal happiness influenced by improved individual health and community engagement is the ultimate goal reflecting the cumulative effects of the foundation's initiatives (Serrat 2017). Cultural integration resulting from increased appreciation and understanding of different cultures through educational and travel experiences contributes to social cohesion and mutual respect enhancing the quality of life and promoting global understanding (Young et al. 2022). Sustainable health practices marked by the long-term adoption of healthy behaviors within communities lead to decreased healthcare costs and improved quality of life. Sustainable health practices are a critical impact of GHIF's health programs ensuring lasting benefits for participants (Cunningham et al. 1998).\nBudget\nThe Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) requires a comprehensive budget and budget justification to effectively implement its programs to enhance healthcare access educational opportunities and cultural immersion. The budget must align with the organization's vision and strategic goals ensuring transparency and efficient use of funds.\nThe proposed budget for GHIF encompasses key areas essential for achieving our mission: healthcare services educational programs wellness travel experiences administrative costs and evaluation. Each line item is meticulously calculated to ensure that resources are allocated effectively promoting both immediate impact and long-term sustainability. \nBudget for Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF)\n\t\nCategory\t\nDescription\t\nItemized Cost (USD)\t\nTotal Cost (USD)\n\t\nHealthcare Services\t\n\t\n\t\n$1000000\n\t\n\t\nMobile Clinics\t\n$400000\t\n\n\t\n\t\nMental Health Counseling\t\n$350000\t\n\n\t\n\t\nPreventive Health Workshops\t\n$250000\t\n\n\t\nEducational Programs\t\n\t\n\t\n$750000\n\t\n\t\nAfter-School Programs\t\n$300000\t\n\n\t\n\t\nScholarships\t\n$250000\t\n\n\t\n\t\nVocational Training\t\n$200000\t\n\n\t\nWellness Travel Model\t\n\t\n\t\n$500000\n\t\n\t\nGuided Meditation Retreats\t\n$200000\t\n\n\t\n\t\nWellness Workshops\t\n$150000\t\n\n\t\n\t\nCultural Exchange Programs\t\n$150000\t\n\n\t\nAdministrative Costs\t\n\t\n\t\n$450000\n\t\n\t\nStaff Salaries\t\n$300000\t\n\n\t\n\t\nOffice Supplies\t\n$50000\t\n\n\t\n\t\nOperational Costs\t\n$100000\t\n\n\t\nMonitoring and Evaluation\t\n\t\n\t\n$300000\n\t\n\t\nData Collection Tools\t\n$100000\t\n\n\t\n\t\nEvaluation Consultants\t\n$150000\t\n\n\t\n\t\nReporting\t\n$50000\t\n\n\t\nTotal\t\n\t\n\t\n$3000000\n\nBudget Justification\nHealthcare Services are critical for addressing underserved communities' immediate and preventive health needs. This allocation includes organizing mobile health clinics providing mental health counseling and conducting preventive health workshops. Mobile clinics will reach remote areas ensuring essential medical services are accessible to all. Mental health counseling will support individuals in managing psychological well-being while preventive health workshops will educate communities on maintaining healthy lifestyles. Studies have shown that improved access to healthcare services leads to better health outcomes and increased longevity (Gu et al. 2009).\nEducational Programs aim to fill educational gaps and promote continuous learning. This budget supports after-school programs providing supplementary education scholarships to facilitate higher education for disadvantaged youth and vocational training to equip individuals with practical skills for employment. Educational attainment enhances psychological well-being and social support networks making this investment crucial for both individual and societal development (Ross & Van Willigen 1997). These programs are designed to reach over 10000 individuals in the first year significantly impacting community education levels.\nThe Wellness Travel Model integrates health-promoting activities with cultural experiences. This allocation covers guided meditation retreats wellness workshops and cultural exchange programs. These initiatives offer participants opportunities to gain new perspectives and improve their mental and physical well-being. Wellness programs embedded in travel experiences can significantly reduce stress and enhance mental health (Young et al. 2020). This model will initially serve 1000 participants promoting a connected and empathetic global community.\nAdministrative Costs cover essential expenses such as staff salaries office supplies and operational costs necessary for the smooth functioning of GHIF. This includes hiring experienced professionals to manage programs coordinate with partners and ensure compliance with local regulations. Effective administration is crucial for maintaining operational integrity and achieving the foundation\u2019s goals. These costs ensure the foundation can operate efficiently and effectively supporting all programmatic activities.\nMonitoring and Evaluation are vital for assessing the impact of GHIF\u2019s initiatives and making data-driven improvements. This budget item includes procuring data collection tools hiring evaluation consultants and producing detailed reports. Regular evaluation ensures that programs are aligned with GHIF's objectives and deliver measurable outcomes. This continuous feedback loop is essential for refining and improving the foundation's efforts (Serrat 2017).\nWithin GHIF the $3 million budget is a solid foundation for realizing the organization's ambitious vision and wide-reaching objectives. This comprehensive budget underpins every facet of GHIF\u2019s mission encompassing healthcare education cultural integration and operational infrastructure. With this grant secured GHIF can confidently pursue its goal of fostering a more resilient interconnected and healthier global community poised to impact global well-being significantly.\nReferences\nAnderson A. Application: Rationale for Learning Goal 4\n\nArtifact:\nFor the learning goal of prioritizing large volumes of information and data to develop a concise grant narrative, the Executive Summary and Evaluation sections of the Global Happiness Initiative Foundation (GHIF) proposal in Assignment #2 serve as exemplary artifacts.\n\nRationale:\nThe Executive Summary and Evaluation sections of the GHIF proposal demonstrate my ability to synthesize extensive information into a clear, concise narrative. The Executive Summary succinctly presents the foundation\u2019s mission, goals, and key strategies, providing a comprehensive overview of the proposal while maintaining brevity and clarity\u301036\u2020source\u3011. This section effectively prioritizes essential information, ensuring that potential donors can quickly grasp the core aspects of the grant proposal without being overwhelmed by details.\n\nIn the Evaluation section, I distilled complex data collection and analysis methodologies into a straightforward narrative, outlining the formative and summative evaluation strategies and the tools to be used for measuring the program\u2019s impact\u301036\u2020source\u3011. This approach highlights my ability to handle large volumes of data, prioritize critical elements, and present them in a manner that is both accessible and informative. By focusing on the most relevant data and structuring the narrative logically, I ensured that the proposal\u2019s evaluation plan is clear and compelling. Thus, this artifact demonstrates my proficiency in developing a concise grant narrative that effectively communicates key information to stakeholders."]}, "status": "finished_successfully","end_turn": true
