As the networks expand and reporting projects diversify, you will have a voice in shaping your role and responsibilities. \n\nResponsibilities: \n\nResearch and support for fellows \n\nResearching tools and solutions for technical issues. \n\nProviding one-on-one training to fellows, including meeting regularly to provide advice, help troubleshoot projects; methodologies, suggest the best technical tools and data, and perform technical tasks like scraping online databases and performing statistical analysis when necessary. \n\nBuilding tutorials/documentation for fellows on investigation tools and skills. \n\nDeveloping methodologies and documentation that can contribute to advancing data and investigative journalism in environment and AI. \n\nProject management \n\nFacilitating and coordinating collaboration among fellows of the three initiatives. \n\nContributing data and documents to in-house data intelligence platform. \n\nCoordinating and supervising the work of consultants and staff hired to initiatives aforementioned. \n\nQualifications: \n\nFluency in oral and written English. \n\nFamiliarity with other languages (especially from the regions of Latin America, Africa and Southeast Asia) strongly preferred \n\nStrong project management skills, experience prioritizing and managing multiple tasks without compromising quality. \n\nCreative problem-solving and strategic innovation \n\n3 - 5 years of experience in journalism or related fields; you don't have to be a journalist but experience working with journalists or in journalism is a plus, as the position requires: \n\nA deep knowledge of past journalistic data projects that inform your suggestions and problem solving. \n\nA good understanding of core journalistic values, including accuracy, independence, and fairness. \n\nThe belief in the power of stories to make complex issues urgent and relevant, and inspire action. \n\nStrong technical skills, via academic or professional work, including: \n\nData analysis with coding (e.g. Python, R) \n\nData scraping \n\nAPI \n\nBuilding new datasets when they are unavailable \n\nGeospatial analysis (e.g. QGIS, GEE) \n\nSatellite imagery and mapping \n\nDesigning experiments to learn how algorithms make decisions \n\nStatistical knowledge (e.g. when analyzing datasets and algorithms) \n\nProven experience or familiarity working with data sources related to the environment and AI technologies, including: \n\nFreedom of Information (FOI) request \n\nGovernment procurement data \n\nCompany listings and stock exchange \n\nImport/export and trade data \n\nShipping data (e.g. IMO vessel registration, VMS, AIS) \n\nOcean science data (e.g. sea level, temperature, ice melt, pollution, acidification) \n\nForest and land use data (e.g. deforestation, indigenous communities, mining) \n\nCollege Degree preferred. \n\nAbility to produce data visualizations for storytelling preferred. \n\nThis position is fully remote. Global candidates encouraged to apply. \n\n\nThe Center uses an established compensation philosophy in administering compensation. Offers are determined based on candidate qualifications, related experience, internal equity, and the amount budgeted for the position. \n\n\nCompensation for US-based employees: Salary range listed above is for US-based employees. Our benefit package includes paid time off (holiday, vacation, parental and sick), health care coverage (including medical/dental/vision), health savings accounts 403(b) retirement plan, transit benefit, parental leave, and Life & ADD/LTD/STD Insurance.

Compensation for non US-based employees: All non-US salaries are calculated using an international conversion index, which includes estimates for comparable positions in the country of residence and the estimated cost of health insurance. We do offer paid leave benefits which include hours in recognition of local holidays, vacation, sick, parental, and bereavement leave. We do not offer health or retirement benefits for employees outside of the US.

As an experienced business professional with a diverse background in logistics, software programming, and leading technical and project teams, I am eager to bring my skills and passion for environmental journalism to support the impactful work of the Center.\n\nThroughout my career, I have demonstrated a strong ability to manage projects efficiently, prioritize tasks, and collaborate with diverse stakeholders to achieve desired outcomes. The opportunity to work with the Environmental Investigations Unit and contribute to the Rainforest Investigations (RIN), Ocean Reporting Network (ORN), and Artificial Intelligence Accountability Networks is both exciting and aligns perfectly with my interest in making a positive impact on global environmental issues.\n\nIn my previous role as a Customer Success Manager at Acadly, Inc., I honed my communication and relationship-building skills while nurturing strong connections with users and administrators. Additionally, my experience as a Software Development Associate at Revature allowed me to work collaboratively with developers to create innovative applications, and my time as a Service Delivery Manager at Jacksonville Transportation Authority strengthened my leadership and community engagement abilities.\n\nFurthermore, my passion for teaching and mentoring was evident during my tenure as an English Language Tutor and TEFL Instructor at PED Academy. I developed engaging lesson plans, fostered critical thinking skills in students, and produced holiday-themed theatrical performances to enhance language learning experiences.\n\nWith a Bachelor's Degree in Business Administration, a TEFL Certification specializing in Young Learners and Teens, and a Master's in Organizational Leadership underway, I am well-equipped to handle the technical aspects of this role. My proficiency in data analysis, scraping, API, and geospatial analysis, among others, combined with my familiarity with data sources related to the environment and AI technologies, makes me confident in my ability to support investigative journalism initiatives effectively.\n\nMoreover, my fluency in English and familiarity with other languages, especially those from Latin America, Africa, and Southeast Asia, will enable me to engage with and support journalists from various regions. I am constantly seeking new solutions and tools to enhance my skills and knowledge, and I am eager to contribute to the advancement of investigative journalism by sharing my expertise through reporting recipes and methodologies.\n\nI am truly excited about the prospect of joining the Pulitzer Center's team and collaborating with some of the world's leading investigative journalists. As a remote worker, I am fully committed to supporting fellows and grantees from anywhere in the world, and I am prepared to contribute my technical skills and creativity to drive real-world impact in the fight against climate change and the protection of our ecosystems.\n\nThank you for considering my application. I am eager to discuss how my qualifications align with the Data Specialist role and how I can contribute to the Pulitzer Center's mission of supporting independent global journalism.\n\nPlease find my resume attached for your review. websites that offer freelance editing work similar to Cactus Communications. However, there are various platforms that connect freelancers with editing opportunities after they pass a test or evaluation. Please note that the availability of these platforms may change over time, so it's a good idea to verify their current status and reputation before signing up. Here are some websites that were popular for freelance editing work in the past:\n\n1. Upwork (www.upwork.com): Upwork is a large freelancing platform that offers a wide range of job opportunities, including editing and proofreading.\n\n2. Freelancer (www.freelancer.com): Similar to Upwork, Freelancer is a global freelancing platform that connects clients with freelancers across various fields, including editing.\n\n3. Fiverr (www.fiverr.com): Fiverr is a marketplace where freelancers offer their services in the form of 'gigs.' There are editors and proofreaders available for hire.\n\n4. Scribendi(www.scribendi.com):

Scribendi is a well-known editing and proofreading company that occasionally hires freelancers.\n\n5. EditFast (www.editfast.com): EditFast is a platform that connects clients with professional editors and writers, and you can apply to join their team.\n\n6. Wordvice (www.wordvice.com): Wordvice is an editing service that hires freelance editors who meet their qualifications.\n\n7. Guru (www.guru.com): Guru is another freelancing platform that has editing and proofreading jobs available.\n\nRemember that each platform has its own application and testing process, and the competition can vary. Make sure to read reviews and testimonials from other freelancers to get a sense of the platform's reputation and reliability.\n\nKeep in mind that new platforms may have emerged after my last update, and some of the mentioned websites might have changed their policies. "text", "parts": ["To find the model number of an old Samsung flat-panel TV, you can try the following methods:\n\n1. Check the TV's user manual or documentation: If you still have the original user manual or any documentation that came with the TV, the model number is often listed on the cover or on one of the first few pages.\n\n2.
Look for a label or sticker on the TV: Check the back panel or the side of the TV for a label or sticker. The model number is usually printed on this label along with other information like the serial number and manufacturing date.\n\n3. Use the TV's on-screen menu: Some Samsung TVs allow you to access the model number through the on-screen menu. To do this, use your TV remote and navigate through the settings menu.
Look for an option like "Support," "About," or "System Information." The model number should be listed there.\n\n4. Check the TV's packaging: If you still have the original box in which the TV was packaged, the model number should be clearly printed on the box.\n\n5. Search online using the TV's physical characteristics: If you cannot find the model number on the TV itself, you can try searching online using specific physical characteristics of the TV, such as the screen size, resolution, design, and any unique features it may have. This might help narrow down the search and identify the correct model.\n\n6. Contact Samsung support: If none of the above methods work, you can try reaching out to Samsung customer support. Provide them with any information you have about the TV, and they may be able to help you identify the model number.\n\nKeep in mind that the location of the model number may vary depending on the specific model and year of manufacture of the TV. Additionally, if the TV is very old and the label has faded or worn off, it may be more challenging to find the model number."]], "status":

Samsung TV out of display or demo mode, you can follow these general steps. Keep in mind that the exact steps may vary depending on the TV model, as different models have slightly different menu layouts. However, this should give you a good starting point:\n\n1. Turn on the TV: Press the power button on the TV or the remote control to turn on the TV.\n\n2. Access the menu: Using the TV remote, press the 'Menu' button. This will bring up the on-screen menu.\n\n3. Navigate to 'Settings': Use the arrow keys on the remote to navigate to the 'Settings' or 'Setup' option in the on-screen menu. This may be represented by a gear or wrench icon.\n\n4. Look for 'General' or 'System': Within the Settings menu, you may find a category like 'General' or 'System.'
Navigate to this section.\n\n5. Find 'Store/Shop Mode' or 'Demo Mode': Within the General or System settings, look for an option called 'Store Mode,' 'Shop Mode,' or 'Demo Mode.' This mode is used in display units to showcase the TV's features in stores.\n\n6. Disable Store/Shop Mode: Once you locate the Store/Shop Mode option, select it, and change the setting from 'On' to 'Off' or 'Home Mode' (or any option that indicates the TV is for personal use).\n\n7. Save the settings: After changing the Store Mode setting, select 'Save' or 'Apply' to confirm the change and exit the menu.\n\n8. Restart the TV: Some models may require you to restart the TV to apply the changes fully. You can do this by turning the TV off and then kindly ask you to somehow provide us with what Julia has asked for and what she has mentioned.\n\nI would also like to take this opportunity to inform you of the following:\n\n1) Julia and I worked together for 10 hours to properly clean the apartment you stayed in.\n2) The mattresses were in terrible condition, and I had to replace them at a cost of 400 euros.\n3) Two people spent three afternoons working, and I spent 500 EUR to repaint all the rooms.\n4) Several items are broken or in poor condition... etc.\n\nNaturally, I am sorry and saddened by all this, but it doesn't matter. What I cannot tolerate is rudeness and a lack of respect for things, oneself, and others. \n\nWith confidence that Julia's request will be

Autism is a neurodevelopmental condition that falls under the umbrella of neurodivergence. People with autism often experience challenges in social interaction, communication, and behavior.\n\nWord choice errors and difficulties in speaking and accurately expressing thoughts, experiences, and feelings can be common among individuals with autism. These challenges may stem from various factors such as atypical language development, pragmatic difficulties (difficulty understanding and using language in social contexts), or executive function impairments affecting the ability to organize and articulate thoughts effectively.\n\nLanguage and communication difficulties can vary widely among individuals with autism. Some may have difficulties with verbal communication and rely on alternative methods like augmentative and alternative communication (AAC), sign language, or assistive technology. Others may have challenges with subtle aspects of language, such as understanding idioms, sarcasm, or non-literal language.\n\nIt's important to note that the experiences of individuals with autism can vary greatly. Some individuals may excel in certain areas, such as memorization or specific topics of interest, while facing challenges in others. Understanding and accommodating these differences can help create a supportive environment that fosters effective communication and overall well-being for individuals with autism."}], "status": "finished_successfully", "end_turn": true, "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"message_type": null, "model_slug": "text-davinci-002-render-sha-mobile", "finish_details": {"type": "stop", "stop": "<|diff_marker|>"}, "timestamp_": "absolute"}, "recipient": "all", "channel": null, "parent": "96b537a0-31c8-4eea-a04c-3766cadda812", "children": ["ae20f5b3-0814-4e37-a679-6cdcd6d1214f"]}, "ae20f5b3-0814-4e37-a679-6cdcd6d1214f": {"id": "ae20f5b3-0814-4e37-a679-6cdcd6d1214f", "message": {"id": "ae20f5b3-0814-4e37-a679-6cdcd6d1214f", "author": {"role": "user", "name": null, "metadata": {}}, "create_time": 1686904435.459396, "update_time": null, "content": {"content_type": "text", "parts": ["What is augmentative and alternative communication?"]}, "status": "finished_successfully", "end_turn": null, "weight": 1.0, "metadata": {"timestamp_": "absolute", "message_type": null}, "recipient": "all", "channel": null, "parent": "e01c11f3-eea3-4cd4-b214-8b652d127fbc", "children": ["f2888c90-314f-4967-a869-00031004e210"]}, "f2888c90-314f-4967-a869-00031004e210": {"id": "f2888c90-314f-4967-a869-00031004e210", "message": {"id": "f2888c90-314f-4967-a869-00031004e210", "author": {"role": "assistant", "name": null, "metadata": {}}, "create_time": 1686904444.488951, "update_time": null, "content": {"content_type": "text", "parts": ["Augmentative and Alternative Communication (AAC) refers to various methods and tools used to enhance or replace spoken communication for individuals who have difficulty with speech or cannot rely on verbal language alone to express their thoughts, needs, and desires. AAC can help individuals with a wide range of conditions, including autism, cerebral palsy, traumatic brain injury, and other developmental or acquired communication disorders.\n\nAAC encompasses a broad range of approaches, strategies, and tools. Here are a few examples:\n\n1. Picture Exchange Communication System (PECS): PECS involves using a series of pictures or symbols to represent objects, actions, or concepts. Individuals can exchange these pictures to communicate their desires or needs.\n\n2. Communication Boards and Books: These are visual displays that include pictures, symbols, or words organized in a systematic manner. Users can point or indicate their choices to communicate.

3. Speech-generating Devices: These electronic devices generate synthesized speech based on user input. They may have customizable screens or keyboards that allow individuals to select words, phrases, or sentences to be spoken aloud.

4. Sign Language: For individuals who have difficulty with verbal speech, sign language can provide a visual and gestural means of communication. Different sign languages exist worldwide, such as American Sign Language (ASL) or British Sign Language (BSL).

5. Gesture and Body Language: Non-verbal communication methods, including gestures, facial expressions, and body language, can be used to convey messages and express needs.

AAC systems are tailored to meet the unique needs and abilities of individuals. Some systems are low-tech and simple, while others involve sophisticated technologies. The goal of AAC is to provide individuals with a means of effective communication, promote independence, and improve overall quality of life." ]],

Consider adding more of the non-spicy components of the dish, such as additional vegetables, rice, pasta, or a neutral-flavored sauce or broth.\n\n2. Add dairy or creamy elements: Dairy products like yogurt, sour cream, or coconut milk can help tone down the heat. Stir in a spoonful of yogurt or add a splash of coconut milk to your dish to mellow the spiciness.\n\n3. Increase acidity: Acidic ingredients like lemon or lime juice can help cut through the spiciness. Squeeze some citrus juice over the dish or add a splash of vinegar to balance the flavors.\n\n4. Sweeten it up: A touch of sweetness can counteract the heat. Add a small amount of sugar, honey, or a sweetener of your choice to help tame the spiciness.\n\n5. Serve with cooling accompaniments: Serve your spicy dish with cooling accompaniments like cucumber slices, plain yogurt, or a refreshing side salad. These can provide relief from the heat and offer a contrast of flavors.\n\nRemember, the effectiveness of these methods may vary depending on the specific dish and the level of spiciness. &quot;It's not a question of enough. You say you feel like it's never enough, but I tell you often that it's more than enough. If I wanted to say anything as a kind of feedback, I would tell it to you like this: I give you 8.5/10 overall. However, that's not a perfect score, and we do not have a perfect situation, and that's okay. Even more interesting, actually. But the part that I'm still trying to figure out how to navigate that is comfortable for me, THE PART THAT IS FOR ME, is how to balance all these new things. How to make sure I feel confident EVERYONE (You, me, Irie, Ralphie) can be comfortable and happy. This is my focus. This is what's important to me. However, I get the impression you don't understand, accept, or appreciate this thing. \n\nIn an interaction between two people where they set the tone and make the &quot;rules,&quot; so to speak, and I tell you what I think, and you don't accept, and feel mistreated, and feel that you failed and it's never enough, and I already told you it's enough, and I do nice things for you to show you it's enough and that I am happy, like cooking for you, leaving my dog out places where I am but he shouldn't be, trying to be neater, trying to live my life matching your schedule and not how I prefer to be normally ( and this is okay, and possibly even better for me. who knows? time will tell.) I have to say the only differences between us I'm afraid of, that I care about and am worried about, is this: I say exactly what I mean and still it's not right. When I tell you a concern you hit me with the &quot;it's never enough, you always ask for more,&quot; BUT I DIDN'T ASK YOU FOR ANYTHING. I AM SO GRATEFUL THAT I GET TO ENJOY THE EXPERIENCE OF BEING WITH YOU; THATS WHAT I'M FOCUSED ON. \n\nYou say you want me to be honest and straight with you, but when I tell you the things, you react negatively, and then we argue, and you get pissed off. If I don't say the things, then you fill in for me with assumptions that are not correct, and when I tell you they're not correct, the cycle starts again, or else you go to a single thing that was never contested. Like Ralphie sleeping under the covers. I like Ralphie sleeping under the covers. I also like sleeping under the covers with you. I can't have both. The fact is there is no compromise for this thing, and so I or we must keep him from under the covers. \nYou speak of levels; that's how you see things. I am different from you. I don't see things your way, but I also don't care that we are different. When I say &quot;I don't care,&quot; I mean I don't care about that we are different. I do not think of right and wrong for instances of differences between two people. If no one faced mortal peril or intense emotional distress, why bring morality (right and wrong) into it? I am simple and direct, and I mean exactly what I say 9 times out of 10. You tell me you're happy and that you like me and that I should be myself, but in the same breath of the same conversation, you say I don't care about anything, that I don't grow up, that it seems like I want everyone to be okay with my way or to do my way and this is the exact opposite of everything that I have said. So what is the point of the conversation? How can I talk to you and tell you things? How can I avoid pissing you off but still also exist in the space? What have I misunderstood? Because if I know, I trust that you care for me and are doing everything you can to ensure I am safe, feel good, etc. I don't place importance or value on these negative thoughts. I don't care about those negative thoughts. I know that they are a singular moment, not the true reality of the collective moments. However, if you ask me my opinion or a question about a specific thing, I will give it to you, and it doesn't negate the overall truth or reality. Both are true, I fuckin' adore you, but I wish you could cut me some slack.

When two people live together in a home, they decide what's normal. In a place where one person sets the tone of what's normal and the other person is completely transparent and honest about what is not normal for them, what is different for them, and how in this present moment/situation, they cannot continue as they were continuing before happily. This is a change. This is new. And so now they must change in order to meet the other person's side because it's not possible to compromise as is the case with the spaces I occupy with Ralphie and the spaces I occupy with you, like, for example, the bed. If I'm doing it your way or the normal way (to me, it doesn't matter what we call it, it doesn't change what we do, so we can call it anything), then I must put Ralphie on top of the cover and also fight with him not go under the covers. I don't like to go to war. I don't like to fight with people or animals to get a thing to be a certain way. I can't change anyone. I can only change myself. Let me change myself to meet you where you are, but also let me acknowledge that is what I'm doing so that when I'm doing this thing constantly that I hate to do (fight with my dog) and its all the time with everything, the couch, the bed, now the bathroom, and in my case I don't care. My mom used to be like, "Keep me company while I doo-doo"; To me, I'm used to if you're in the circle, you're in, and I don't have any limits there. My levels are different from yours, they are different from yours so I need to adjust. It's like you say you are doing all you can to let me feel comfortable, but I am doing the same for you but my report card always goes like all day I've been being nice and patient with you while you did exactly as you liked but actually I am mostly in these days is doing as I like which is adjusting/changing to meet your expectations of normal which inevitably involves doing a bunch stuff like (fighting with my dog) and that seems to me strange. But if I mention this to you I get met with curtness, upset, or the feeling that I am aggravating you. I feel like you are going to war against me in those moments and I thought we were supposed to be a team. I'm over here managing all this myself, trying to meet the target points you set, not complaining. I feel like I don't get any grace for that. I don't get any benefit of the doubt or credit for my efforts, and I always somehow say the wrong thing to set you off. I don't know how to not set you off. All I've ever come up with is the idea to say less and that hasn't worked either. So we have a communication problem because I don't get heard and understood and between two people, that's a problem. I am working on a solution, I'm trying to, but you seem like you think the problem is me, and I should just be different, and everything would be okay.

And actually, I can only control myself, no one else, I SHOULD focus on and think about how I can change and adapt to this situation. I should find a way to be happy. My way in the past has been to keep my thoughts for myself (my thoughts are my business, and everybody doesn't need to know your business. I always feel like you should be the exception to the rule, but in our situation, that's not true. I'm oversharing. In the end, it's just better for me functionally not to share but I hope you understand why. I hope and want to be understood by you so much. That what I want. \n\nI tell you what's important to me because I understand you are trying your best to make me feel comfortable and also because I desperately wish to express myself to someone and be understood. That's what would make me feel comfortable. I have been feeling like you understand me, and my goals and my way of being and that you like it but then you get pissed off and I become afraid and anxious that you don't understand me at all and then say exactly things are opposite of all the talking we've been doing. You said you don't want to discuss every little thing, okay, I can see where that's exhausting. What can we do to understand each other then? Or is the old thing again, that if I'm not the same as you then we never get to understand each other? \n\nI write all this and say all this hoping to help you understand me. Giving it my last ditch effort, not giving up on the thing that is important to me. Trying to learn how I should be so that I don't piss you off and everybody can be happy. I may have asked you some questions, but those were not literal questions, mostly. Those were thinking prompts to inspire you to care about what I think and to help you see my point of view and understand me and accept that we are different in these ways, but that doesn't mean to me what it means to you. I want you to trust me. I want to continue our happy way together. Trust me if I tell you I am happy and trust me if I tell you I'm anxious. If I tell you I'm anxious and you're an anxious person too, I'm thinking you're going to share with me how you think we should approach this issue. At that moment, I'm warning you that today I have a lot on my plate. Can you cut me some slack and some grace? To me, that looks like you telling me what you think about that, you respect me and value what I have taken the time to express to you, my thoughts, which is hard for me. I am struggling just to do this simple thing. \n\nI want that you meet me in the middle here. I want that our compromise is that you tell me straight then. Not treat me like a child and try to endure all day, and then at 2130, tell me I've been anxious and horrible all day and you're sick, and could I at least stop now? That feels like a betrayal. I don't like this kind of occurrence. And if I point that out to you, I risk offending you, being misunderstood, my words being twisted to something, or making you feel like its always you who is the issue. I am loudly and literally telling you that I always feel like it is me and that it feels like unavoidable to be in conflict with you and I don't want to be in conflict with you. I have to figure out a way to be myself while also meeting your standards about what is or isn't normal; and I don't know these standards and I need to learn them. It's a lot. I am overwhelmed even more and I am failing to find the solution and I feel alone but I am standing next to a person and its never enough and the circle begins again and its like I never said anything in the beginning like I'm really happy, I feel appreciated. do well. "However, that's not a perfect score, and we do not have a perfect situation, and that's okay. Even more interesting, actually. But the part that I'm still trying to figure out how to navigate that is comfortable for me, THE PART THAT IS FOR ME, is how to balance all these new things. How to make sure I feel confident EVERYONE (You, me, Irie, Ralphie) can be comfortable and happy. This is my focus. This is what's important to me. However, I get the impression you don't understand, accept, or appreciate this thing. In an interaction between two people where they set the tone and make the "rules," so to speak, and I tell you what I think, and you don't accept, and feel mistreated, and feel that you failed and it's never enough, and I already told you it's enough, and I do nice things for you to show you it's enough and that I am happy, like cooking for you, leaving my dog out places where I am but he shouldn't be, trying to be neater, trying to live my life matching your schedule and not how I prefer to be normally (and this is okay, and possibly even better for me. who knows? time will tell.) I have to say the only differences between us I'm afraid of, that I care about and am worried about, is this: I say exactly what I mean, and still, it's not right. When I tell you a concern I have, you hit me with the "it's never enough; you always ask for more," BUT I DIDN'T ASK YOU FOR ANYTHING. I AM SO GRATEFUL THAT I GET TO ENJOY THE EXPERIENCE OF BEING WITH YOU; THAT'S WHAT I'M FOCUSED ON. You say you want me to be honest and straight with you, but when I tell you the things, you react negatively, and then we argue, and you get pissed off. If I don't say the things, then you fill in for me with assumptions that are not correct, and when I tell you they're not correct, the cycle starts again, or else you go to a single thing that was never contested. Like Ralphie sleeping under the covers. I like Ralphie sleeping under the covers. I also like sleeping under the covers with you. I can't have both. The fact is there is no compromise for this thing, and so I or we must keep him from under the covers. But for me, respect looks like acknowledging that to achieve being with you. I HAVE TO CHANGE HOW I INTERACT with my dog. You speak of levels; that's how you see things. I am different from you. I don't see things your way, but I also don't care that we are different. When I say "I don't care," I mean I don't care about that we are different. I do not think of right and wrong for instances of differences between two people. If no one faced mortal peril or intense emotional distress, why bring morality (right and wrong) into it? I am simple and direct, and I mean exactly what I say 9 times out of 10. You tell me you're happy and that you like me and that I should be myself, but in the same breath of the same conversation, you say I don't care about anything, that I don't grow up, that it seems like I want everyone to be okay with my way or to do my way and this is the exact opposite of everything that I have said. So what is the point of the conversation? How can I talk to you and tell you things? How can I avoid pissing you off but still also exist in the space? What have I misunderstood? Because if I know, I trust that you care for me and are doing everything you can to ensure I am safe, feel good, etc. I don't place importance or value on these negative thoughts. I don't care about those negative thoughts. I know that they are a singular moment, not the true reality of the collective moments. However, if you ask me my opinion or a question about a specific thing, I will give it to you, and it doesn't negate the overall truth or reality. Both are true, I fuckin' adore you, but I wish you could cut me some slack in these areas. When two people live together in a home, they decide what's normal. In a place where one person

express myself to someone and be understood. That's what would make me feel comfortable. I have been feeling like you understand me, and my goals, and my way of being and that you like it, but then you get pissed off, and I become afraid and anxious that you don't understand me at all. \n\nYou said you don't want to discuss every little thing; okay, I can see where that's exhausting. What can we do to understand each other then? Or is the old thing again, that if I'm not the same as you, then we never get to understand each other? I don't accept that. \n\nI write all this and say all this hoping to help you understand me. Giving it my last ditch effort, not giving up on the thing that is important to me. Trying to learn how I should be so that I don't piss you off and everybody can be happy. \n\nIn this whole long dissertation, I may have asked you some questions, but those were not literal questions, mostly. Those were thinking prompts to inspire you to care about what I think and to help you see my point of view and understand me and accept that we are different in these ways, but that doesn't mean to me what it means to you. \n\nI want you to trust me. I want to continue our happy way together. I want you to understand me. Trust and understand me if I tell you I am happy, and trust me if I tell you I'm anxious. If I tell you I'm anxious, and you're an anxious person too, I'm thinking you're going to share with me how you think we should approach this issue. At that moment, I'm warning you that today I have a lot on my plate. Can you cut me some slack and some grace? To me, that looks like you telling me what you think about that and respecting me by valuing what I have taken the time to express to you: my thoughts, my opinions, my point of view, which is hard for me. I am every day explaining to you that I struggle to articulate my thoughts and feelings to my sister, who has known me since I was born, so imagine how much effort is going into explaining myself to you? I am struggling just to do this simple thing. \n\nI want that you meet me in the middle here. I want that our compromise for you to tell me straight then, in the beginning. Not treat me like a child, say anything to me "to let me feel comfortable," and try to endure my anxiousness all day, ignore me when I encourage you to leave me separate because I feel like you're stressed and instead pretend that you're enjoying our discussions until get pissed off, anxious and overwhelmed and then at 2130, tell me I've been anxious and horrible all day, and you're sick, and could I at least stop now? That feels like a betrayal. I don't like this kind of occurrence. And if I express to you my thoughts on this subject, I risk offending you, being misunderstood, my words being twisted to something, or making you feel like it's always you who is the issue. I am loudly and literally telling you that I always feel like it is me and that it feels unavoidable to be in conflict with you, and I don't want to be in conflict with you. \n\nI have to figure out a way to be myself while also meeting your standards about what is or isn't normal, and I don't know these standards, but I need to learn them. It's a lot. \n\nI am overwhelmed even more, and I am failing to find the solution, and tonight after you revealed to me that "all day you've been enduring," for the first time, I felt alone, while with you, like I was really in Narnia all day and YOU were just fooling me. \n\nI am an intelligent but simple person. I just want to be happy, look at beautiful things, eat good food, touch everything, and use all my senses to stimulate myself toward beauty and intrigue. I don't want to be in conflict or war with anyone for any reason if I can avoid it. I am a pacifist. \n\nThat's why I always ask you, "Are you really happy? Do you really like me?" Because you say you are, and then you literally say that I don't care about anyone, and I don't care about you. That I don't live in reality, that I live in Narnia, but somehow at the same time, I MAKE YOU FEEL LIKE I THINK YOU'RE WRONG. I do all I can do to let you know that you did good, but it's never enough, and the circle begins again, and it's like I never said anything in the beginning, like, "I'm really happy. I feel appreciated. I give you 8.5/10 overall." But that's how I feel. On most days, I feel happy and appreciated, and I don't change from saying that because that's what I REALLY AND TRULY think and feel. \n\n"It's not a question of enough. You say you feel like it's never enough, but I tell you often that it's more than enough. If I wanted to say anything as a kind of feedback, I would tell it to you like this: I'm really happy. I feel appreciated. I give you 8.5/10 overall, and that's my assessment of today's events while feeling sick (like ill) and tired, and aggravated. Even so, most days, you're 10/10. You do well. "\n\nHowever, that's not a perfect score, and we do not have a perfect situation, and that's okay. Even more interesting, actually. But the part that I'm still trying to figure out how to navigate that is comfortable for me, THE PART THAT IS FOR ME, is how to balance all these new things. How to make sure I feel confident EVERYONE (You, me, Irie, Ralphie) can be comfortable and happy. This is my focus. This is what's important to me.

However, I get the impression you don't understand, accept, or appreciate this thing. \n\nIn an interaction between two people where they set the tone and make the "rules," so to speak, and I tell you what I think, and you don't accept, and feel mistreated, and feel that you failed and it's never enough, and I already told you its enough, and I do nice things for you to show you its enough and that I am happy, like cooking for you, leaving my dog out places where I am but he shouldn't be, trying to be neater, trying to live my life matching your schedule and not how I prefer to be normally ( and this is okay, and possibly even better for me. who knows? time will tell.) I have to say the only differences between us I'm afraid of, that I care about and am worried about, is this: I say exactly what I mean, and still, it's not right. When I tell you a concern I have, you hit me with the 'it's never enough; you always ask for more,&#x27; BUT I DIDN'T ASK YOU FOR ANYTHING. I AM SO GRATEFUL THAT I GET TO ENJOY THE EXPERIENCE OF BEING WITH YOU; THAT'S WHAT I'M FOCUSED ON. \n\nYou say you want me to be honest and straight with you, but when I tell you the things, you react negatively, and then we argue, and you get pissed off. If I don't say the things, then you fill in for me with assumptions that are not correct, and when I tell you they're not correct, the cycle starts again, or else you go to a single thing that was never

you. I HAVE TO CHANGE HOW I INTERACT with my dog. \n\nYou speak of levels; that's how you see things. I am different from you. I don't see things your way, but I also don't care that we are different. When I say "I don't care," I mean I don't care about that we are different. I do not think of right and wrong for instances of differences between two people. If no one faced mortal peril or intense emotional distress, why bring morality (right and wrong) into it? I am simple and direct, and I mean exactly what I say 9 times out of 10. \n\nYou tell me you're happy and that you like me and that I should be myself, but in the same breath of the same conversation, you say I don't care about anything, that I don't grow up, that it seems like I want everyone to be okay with my way or to do my way and this is the exact opposite of everything that I have said. So what is the point of the conversation? How can I talk to you and tell you things? How can I avoid pissing you off but still also exist in the space? What have I misunderstood? \n\nBecause if I know, I trust that you care for me and are doing everything you can to ensure I am safe, feel good, etc. I don't place importance or value on these negative thoughts. I don't care about those negative thoughts. I know that they are a singular moment, not the true reality of the collective moments. However, if you ask me my opinion or a question about a specific thing, I will give it to you, and it doesn't negate the overall truth or reality. Both are true, I fuckin' adore you, but I wish you could cut me some slack in these areas. \n \nWhen two people live together in a home, they decide what's normal. In a place where one person (Claudio) sets the tone of what's normal and the other person (Alexis) is completely transparent and honest about what is not normal for them, what is different for them, and how in this present moment/situation, they cannot continue as they were continuing before happily. This is a change. This is new. And so now they must change in order to meet the other person's side because it's not possible to compromise as is the case with the spaces I occupy with Ralphie and the spaces I occupy with you, like, for example, the bed. If I'm doing it your way or the normal way (to me, it doesn't matter what we call it, it doesn't change what we do, so we can call it anything), then I must put Ralphie on top of the cover and also fight with him not go under the covers. \n\nI don't like to go to war. I don't like to fight with people or animals to get a thing to be a certain way. I can't change anyone. I can only change myself. My thinking is this: Let me change myself to meet you where you are, but also let me acknowledge that is what I'm doing so that when I'm doing this thing constantly that I hate to do (fight with my dog) and its all the time with everything, the couch, the bed, now the bathroom, and in my case I don't care if he's in the bathroom, it's normal for me. It's okay for me. My mom used to be like, "Keep me company while I doo-doo" To me, I'm used to if you're in the circle, you're in, and I don't have any limits there. My limits are different from yours, they are different from yours so I need to adjust to your limits. Why can't we acknowledge that? Why can't we say it? \n\nIt's like you say you are doing all you can to let me feel comfortable, but I am doing the same for you but my report card always goes like today, "all day, I've been being nice and patient with you while you did exactly as you liked" but actually I am mostly in these days is doing as I like which is adjusting/changing to meet your expectations of normal which inevitably involves doing a bunch of stuff like (fighting with my dog) and that seems to me also very strange. But if I mention this to you, I get met with curtness, upset, or the feeling that I am aggravating you. I feel like you are going to war against me in those moments, and I thought we were supposed to be a team. \n\nI'm over here managing all this myself, trying to meet the target points you set, not complaining. I feel like I don't get any grace for that. I don't get any benefit of the doubt or credit for my efforts, and I always somehow say the wrong thing to set you off. I don't know how to not set you off. All I've ever come up with is the idea to say less, and that hasn't worked either. So I have determined on my own that we have a communication problem because I tell you how I'm feeling, and this makes feel bad, that you're never enough and our only solution now to me making you feel bad is for me to say less. I am working to find a solution, thinking of ways to facilitate the healthy and happy exchange of ideas. I'm trying to find a compromise where we can all be happy, but you seem like you think the problem is me, and I should just be different, and everything would be okay. \n\nAnd actually, I can only control myself and no one else; I SHOULD focus on and think about how I can change and adapt to this situation. I should find a way to be happy. My way in the past has been to keep my thoughts to myself (my thoughts are my business, and everybody doesn't need to know your business. I always feel like you should be the exception to the rule, but in our situation, that's not true. I'm oversharing. In the end, it's just better for me functionally not to share, but I hope you understand why. I hope and want to be understood by you so much. That is what I want. \n\nI tell you what's important to me because I understand you are trying your best to make me feel comfortable and also because I desperately wish to express myself to someone and be understood. That's what would make me feel comfortable. I have been feeling like you understand me, and my goals, and my way of being and that you like it, but then you get pissed off, and I become afraid and anxious that you don't understand me at all. \n\nYou said you don't want to discuss every little thing; okay, I can see where that's exhausting. What can we do to understand each other then? Or is the old thing again, that if I'm not the same as you, then we never get to understand each other? I don't accept that. \n\nI write all this and say all this hoping to help you understand me. Giving it my last ditch effort, not giving up on the thing that is important to me. Trying to learn how I should be so that I don't piss you off and everybody can be happy. \n\nIn this whole long dissertation, I may have asked you some questions, but those were not literal questions, mostly. Those were thinking prompts to inspire you to care about what I think and to help you see my point of view and understand me and accept that we are different in these ways, but that doesn't mean to me what it means to you. \n\nI want you to trust me. I want to continue our happy way together. I want you to understand me. Trust and understand me if I tell you I am happy, and trust me if I tell you I'm anxious. If I tell you I'm anxious, and you're an anxious person too, I'm thinking you're going to share with me how you think we should approach this issue. At that moment, I'm warning you that today I have a lot on my plate. Can you cut me some slack and some grace? To me, that looks like you telling me what you think about that and respecting me by valuing what I have taken the time to express to you: my thoughts, my opinions, my point of view, which is hard for me. I am every day explaining to you that I struggle to articulate my thoughts and feelings to my sister, who has known me since I was born, so imagine how much effort is going into explaining myself to you? I am struggling just to do this simple thing. \n\nI want that you meet me in the middle here. I want that our compromise for you to tell me straight then, in the beginning. Not treat me like a child, say anything to me "to let me feel comfortable," and try to endure my anxiousness all day, ignore me when I encourage you to leave me separate because I feel like you're stressed and instead pretend that you're enjoying our discussions until get pissed off, anxious and overwhelmed and then at 2130, tell me I've been anxious and horrible all day, and you're sick, and could I at least stop now? That feels like a betrayal. I don't like this kind of occurrence. And if I express to you my thoughts on this subject, I risk offending you, being misunderstood, my words being twisted to something, or making you feel like it's always you who is the issue. I am loudly and literally telling you that I always feel like it is me and that it feels unavoidable to be in conflict with you, and I don't want to be in conflict with you. \n\nI have to figure out a way to be myself while also meeting your standards about what is or isn't normal, and I don't know these standards, but I need to learn them. It's a lot. \n\nI am overwhelmed even more, and I am failing to find the solution, and tonight after you revealed to me that "all day you've been enduring," for the first time, I felt alone, while with you, like I was really in Narnia all day and YOU were just fooling me. \n\nI am an intelligent but simple person. I just want to be happy, look at beautiful things, eat good food, touch everything, and use all my senses to stimulate myself toward beauty and intrigue. I don't want to be in conflict or war with anyone for any reason if I can avoid it. I am a pacifist. \n\nThat's why I always ask you, "Are you really happy? Do you really like me?" Because you say you are, and then you literally say that I don't care about anyone, and I don't care about you. That I don't live in reality, that I live in Narnia, but somehow at the same time, I MAKE YOU FEEL LIKE I THINK YOU'RE WRONG. I do all I can do to let you know that you did good, but it's never enough, and the circle begins again, and it's like I never said anything in the beginning, like, "I'm really happy. I feel appreciated. I give you 8.5/10 overall." But that's how I feel. On most days, I feel happy and appreciated, and I don't change from saying that because that's what I REALLY AND TRULY think and feel."

It's okay for me. My mom used to be like, "Keep me company while I doo-doo"; To me, I'm used to if you're in the circle, you're in, and I don't have any limits there. My limits are different from yours, they are different from yours so I need to adjust to your limits. Why can't we acknowledge that? Why can't we say it? \n\nIt's like you say you are doing all you can to let me feel comfortable, but I am doing the same for you but my report card always goes like today, "all day, I've been being nice and patient with you while you did exactly as you liked"; but actually I am mostly in these days is doing as I like which is adjusting/changing to meet your expectations of normal which inevitably involves doing a bunch of stuff like (fighting with my dog) and that seems to me also very strange. But if I mention this to you, I get met with curtness, upset, or the feeling that I am aggravating you. I feel like you are going to war against me in those moments, and I thought we were supposed to be a team. \n\nI'm over here managing all this myself, trying to meet the target points you set, not complaining. I feel like I don't get any grace for that. I don't get any benefit of the doubt or credit for my efforts, and I always somehow say the wrong thing to set you off. I don't know how to not set you off. All I've ever come up with is the idea to say less, and that hasn't worked either. So I have determined on my own that we have a communication problem because I tell you how I'm feeling, and this makes feel bad, that you're never enough and our only solution now to me making you feel bad is for me to say less. I am working to find a solution, thinking of ways to facilitate the healthy and happy exchange of ideas. I'm trying to find a compromise where we can all be happy, but you seem like you think the problem is me, and I should just be different, and everything would be okay. \n\nAnd actually, I can only control myself and no one else; I SHOULD focus on and think about how I can change and adapt to this situation. I should find a way to be happy. My way in the past has been to keep my thoughts to myself (my thoughts are my business, and everybody doesn't need to know your business. I always feel like you should be the exception to the rule, but in our situation, that's not true. I'm oversharing. In the end, it's just better for me functionally not to share, but I hope you understand why. I hope and want to be understood by you so much. That is what I want. \n\nI tell you what's important to me because I understand you are trying your best to make me feel comfortable and also because I desperately wish to express myself to someone and be understood. That's what would make me feel comfortable. I have been feeling like you understand me, and my goals, and my way of being and that you like it, but then you get pissed off, and I become afraid and anxious that you don't understand me at all. \n\nYou said you don't want to discuss every little thing; okay, I can see where that's exhausting. What can we do to understand each other then? Or is the old thing again, that if I'm not the same as you, then we never get to understand each other? I don't accept that. \n\nI write all this and say all this hoping to help you understand me. Giving it my last ditch effort, not giving up on the thing that is important to me. Trying to learn how I should be so that I don't piss you off and everybody can be happy. \n\nIn this whole long dissertation, I may have asked you some questions, but those were not literal questions, mostly. Those were thinking prompts to inspire you to care about what I think and to help you see my point of view and understand me and accept that we are different in these ways, but that doesn't mean to me what it means to you. \n\nI want you to trust me. I want to continue our happy way together. I want you to understand me. Trust and understand me if I tell you I am happy, and trust me if I tell you I'm anxious. If I tell you I'm anxious, and you're an anxious person too, I'm thinking you're going to share with me how you think we should approach this issue. At that moment, I'm warning you that today I have a lot on my plate. Can you cut me some slack and some grace? To me, that looks like you telling me what you think about that and respecting me by valuing what I have taken the time to express to you: my thoughts, my opinions, my point of view, which is hard for me. I am every day explaining to you that I struggle to articulate my thoughts and feelings to my sister, who has known me since I was born, so imagine how much effort is going into explaining myself to you? I am struggling just to do this simple thing. \n\nI want that you meet me in the middle here. I want that our compromise for you to tell me straight then, in the beginning. Not treat me like a child, say anything to me "to let me feel comfortable," and try to endure my anxiousness all day, ignore me when I encourage you to leave me separate because I feel like you're stressed and instead pretend that you're enjoying our discussions until get pissed off, anxious and overwhelmed and then at 2130, tell me I've been anxious and horrible all day, and you're sick, and could I at least stop now? That feels like a betrayal. I don't like this kind of occurrence. And if I express to you my thoughts on this subject, I risk offending you, being misunderstood, my words being twisted to something, or making you feel like it's always you who is the issue. I am loudly and literally telling you that I always feel like it is me and that it feels unavoidable to be in conflict with you, and I don't want to be in conflict with you. \n\nI have to figure out a way to be myself while also meeting your standards about what is or isn't normal, and I don't know these standards, but I need to learn them. It's a lot. \n\nI am overwhelmed even more, and I am failing to find the solution, and tonight after you revealed to me that "all day you've been enduring," for the first time, I felt alone, while with you, like I was really in Narnia all day and YOU were just fooling me. \n\nI am an intelligent but simple person. I just want to be happy, look at beautiful things, eat good food, touch everything, and use all my senses to stimulate myself toward beauty and intrigue. I don't want to be in conflict or war with anyone for any reason if I can avoid it. I am a pacifist. \n\nThat's why I always ask you, "Are you really happy? Do you really like me?" Because you say you are, and then you literally say that I don't care about anyone, and I don't care about you. That I don't live in reality, that I live in Narnia, but somehow at the same time, I MAKE YOU FEEL LIKE I THINK YOU'RE WRONG. I do all I can do to let you know that you did good, but it's never enough, and the circle begins again, and it's like I never said anything in the beginning, like, "I'm really happy. I feel appreciated. I give you 8.5/10 overall." But that's how I feel. On most days, I feel happy and appreciated, and I don't change from saying that because that's what I REALLY AND TRULY think and feel."

methods you can consider to clear a house's energy. Here are a few commonly practiced ones:\n\n1. Smudging: This involves burning herbs, such as white sage or palo santo, and letting the smoke waft through the space while setting intentions for cleansing and releasing negative energy.\n\n2. Salt: Sprinkling salt around the perimeter of the house or placing bowls of salt in different rooms is believed to absorb negative energy.\n\n3. Sound cleansing: Using sound, such as ringing bells, playing singing bowls, or using chanting or mantras, can help purify the energy in a space.\n\n4. Opening windows and letting in fresh air: Allowing fresh air and natural light to circulate throughout the house can help disperse stagnant energy.\n\n5.
Decluttering and cleaning: Removing clutter and thoroughly cleaning your space can create a sense of freshness and renewal.\n\n6. Visualization and intention: Imagine the space being filled with positive, vibrant energy and set clear intentions for the kind of energy you want to invite into your home.\n\nRemember, these practices are rooted in various cultural and spiritual traditions, and it's important to find what resonates with you personally. It's also helpful to combine energy-clearing techniques with creating a positive environment through activities like meditation, positive affirmations, and surrounding yourself with objects that bring you joy and
