money to get money" scam, often called an advance-fee scam, works because scammers prey on people's desire for quick gains and financial relief.
Here\u2019s why they do it and why it tends not to be legitimate:\n\n1.
Psychological Appeal: These scams create a strong incentive by promising large payouts or quick cash if you pay a small fee upfront. Scammers craft these scenarios to sound urgent or enticing, making victims more likely to respond impulsively. \n\n2.
Easy to Disguise: Scammers disguise their tactics under many guises, like lotteries, job offers, grants, or investment opportunities, which can make them seem credible. Some even imitate legitimate financial institutions or government agencies, adding a layer of perceived trustworthiness. \n\n3. Limited Risk for Scammers: Once they get the money, scammers usually disappear, making them hard to track. The low initial fee can make it seem less risky to victims, who often think it\u2019s worth the chance of winning big.\n\nIn terms of legitimacy, any request for upfront payment to receive money should raise red flags. However, legitimate transactions with fees do exist, like service fees for loans or certain legal financial transactions. But in these cases, the fees are transparent, follow a documented process, and come from well-known, licensed institutions or service providers."]}, "status":

["Sure, here\u2019s an extended and finished version of your story:\n\n---\n\nScientists suggest that the human mind processes anywhere from 20,000 to 70,000 thoughts per day. If I were to wake up surrounded by aliens, all my thoughts for the day would pass through my mind at that moment. So many questions and concerns would flash through my mind. \n\nAre they going to hurt me? Will they eat me? Have they studied me while I was sleeping? What did they do to me? Is this real? \n\nIs this real? I would indeed slowly move to sit up in the bed. I'm likely more disturbed by their proximity when I'm awake than their alienness. They would likely all just be looking at me, because to them, I'm an alien in their alien homeworld. How odd. \n\nI wait for one to say something, anything. I imagine they wouldn't have anything I can discern as a mouth, which I would be grateful for, but don't aliens have ESP? I'm sure I would wait for them to speak. \n\nTheir sudden appearance in my bedroom en masse suggests they obviously have something to say\u2014because why else would they all be there when I wake up? Always the taciturn type, I'd make a confused face and think loudly, asking them to say something or anything. I would hope for some revelation as to why they congregated in my bedroom. \n\nThey would probably look like the standard little gray men of legend: large, glossy eyes in a startling shade of yellow-green. Grayish skin covered with something that looks like the soft down you\u2019d find on a sage leaf. Expressionless faces and nearly glowing eyes all staring at me, perhaps five of them. I might make up some stories about them to make them feel familiar and less scary. \n\nThey\u2019re an alien family on vacation, marooned in a strange world, and somehow, they decided to come to my bedroom while I was sleeping. And probably still, they would say nothing and just stare at me. I don't know why we always assume that aliens would communicate with us. \n\nWe would probably have a stare-off for I don\u2019t know how long unless they spoke first. Perhaps after some time, if the tension got to be too much, I\u2019d say something. Something simple, like: \n\n"My name is Alexis. Welcome to Earth." \n\nAnd perhaps then, the smallest alien, the one without the glowing eyes, would toddle forward, reaching out with a tiny, soft hand. The prompt was: \n\nWhat would you do if you woke up and found yourself surrounded by aliens\n\nVersion 1: \n\n\r\nScientists suggest that the human mind processes anywhere from 20,000 to 70,000 thoughts per day. If I were to wake up surrounded by aliens, all my thoughts for the day would pass through my mind at that moment. So many questions and concerns would flash through my mind. \r\n\r\nAre they going to hurt me? Will they eat me? Have they studied me while I was sleeping? What did they do to me? Is this real? \r\n\r\nIs this real? I would indeed slowly move to sit up in the bed. I'm likely more disturbed by their proximity when I'm awake than their alienness. They would likely all just be looking at me because, to them, I'm an alien in their alien homeworld. How odd. \r\n\r\nI wait for one to say something, anything. I imagine they wouldn't have anything I can discern as a mouth, which I would be grateful for, but don't aliens have ESP? I'm sure I would wait for them to speak. \r\n\r\nTheir sudden appearance in my bedroom en masse suggests they obviously have something to say\u2014because why else would they all be there when I woke up? Always the taciturn type, I'd make a confused face and think loudly, asking them to say something or anything. I would hope for some revelation as to why they congregated in my bedroom. \r\n\r\nThey would probably look like the standard little gray men of legend: large, glossy eyes in a startling shade of yellow-green. Grayish skin covered with something that looks like the soft down you\u2019d find on a sage leaf. Expressionless faces and nearly glowing eyes all staring at me, perhaps five of them. I might make up some stories about them to make them feel familiar and less scary. \r\n\r\nThey\u2019re an alien family on vacation, marooned in a strange world, and somehow, they decided to come to my bedroom while I was sleeping. And probably still, they would say nothing and just stare at me. I don't know why we always assume that aliens would communicate with us. \r\n\r\nWe would probably have a stare-off for I don\u2019t know how long unless they spoke first. Gas and lower abdominal pain combined with vaginal tenderness can have several potential causes, ranging from digestive issues to gynecological conditions. Some possibilities include:\n\n1. Bloating and gas: Digestive issues like excessive gas, constipation, or bloating can sometimes cause pain in the lower abdomen.\n \n2. Urinary tract infection (UTI): UTIs can sometimes cause tenderness in the lower abdomen and discomfort around the vagina or bladder.\n \n3. Ovarian cysts or other gynecological concerns: Sometimes, cysts or other issues in the reproductive system can cause abdominal pain and vaginal tenderness.\n\n4. Pelvic inflammatory disease (PID): This infection of the reproductive organs can lead to lower abdominal pain and vaginal tenderness. \n\n5. Endometriosis: In some cases, endometriosis can cause discomfort in the lower abdomen and tenderness in the vaginal area. \n\nSince the symptoms you're describing involve both digestive and reproductive areas, it may be helpful to speak with a healthcare provider to rule out any serious concerns, especially if the pain persists or worsens. Keeping track of other symptoms like fever, changes in bowel habits, or unusual discharge could also be useful information for your doctor. \n\nIn the meantime, staying hydrated, avoiding gas-producing foods, and resting might help alleviate some of the discomfort. Here\u2019s how it can happen:\n\n1. Irregular or absent symptoms: Many pregnancy symptoms, like nausea, fatigue, or bloating, are nonspecific and can be mistaken for other things like stress, illness, or hormonal changes. Some women don\u2019t experience typical pregnancy symptoms, making it harder to tell. \n\n2. Irregular or light periods: For some, bleeding can continue throughout pregnancy, either due to hormonal fluctuations or something called \u201cdecidual bleeding,\u201d where the uterine lining sheds a bit. Women with irregular cycles or spotting may think it\u2019s a period. \n\n3. Weight gain isn\u2019t always obvious: Not all women gain significant weight, and weight gain can be gradual. If a person is heavier to begin with or carries weight differently, a growing belly may go unnoticed. \n\n4. Minimal fetal movement: Some babies move less than others, or if the placenta is positioned in front (anterior placenta), it can cushion movements, making them less obvious. \n\n5. Psychological factors: Denial of pregnancy, though rare, can happen. Some people are mentally or emotionally unable to accept the possibility of pregnancy, which can affect their awareness of symptoms. \n\n6. Existing medical conditions: Conditions like PCOS or thyroid issues can mimic or mask pregnancy symptoms, like weight changes, fatigue, and menstrual irregularities, making it easy to overlook pregnancy. \n\nSo, when these factors combine, pregnancy can actually go undetected for several months\u2014or even until labor in rare cases. the US due to concerns about bias in the hiring process. GitLab, being a global company with strong remote and diversity values, may not expect or require a photo, so it's your choice. making sure it emphasizes the relevant financial and project management skills. \n2.
Skills: Pull from both versions, ensuring the right keywords (e.g., AR management, Zendesk, Tesorio) are included. \n3. Professional Experience: Chronologically organized, highlighting both operational achievements and AR portfolio management. \n4.
